Notice to Europe
Father 79, Baby 8 Pounds
Two in the Electric Chair
Yes, We Are Docile

—By Arthur Brisbane—

LIKE GANG - MEMBERS, collecting on a corner to decide on the next profitable enterprise, a number of Europe's nations are said to have organized NOT to pay money borrowed from Uncle Sam.

They will not relish President Hoover's letter to Senator Borah which says "I DO NOT PROPOSE THAT THE AMERICAN PEOPLE SHALL BE PRESSED INTO ANY LINE OF ACTION OR THAT OUR POLICIES SHOULD BE IN ANY WAY INFLUENCED BY SUCH A COMBINATION, EITHER OPEN OR IMPLIED."

This serves notice on Europe that this country expects them to pay.

It is probable that they will NOT pay, and the United States would not go to war to force payment.

But the President has given notice that they can't combine to "save their faces" and force us to pretend that we like the proposed "welching."

Following that interesting statement from President Hoover, comes the announcement that he has cut his own salary $15,000, reducing it from $75,000 a year to $60,000, which is the maximum cut of 20 per cent allowed under the law. The salaries of cabinet members be reduced 15 per cent, from $15,000 a year to $12,750, under-secretaries 10 per cent.

It is amusing in the government of a republic by big business to find the richest country in the world compelled to cut salaries. France pays her President four times what we pay ours and doesn't ask him to cut his salary.

This would have interested Plato, of ancient Greece, who thought men should have children, when old, and women when fully developed, about 30.

Prof. Richard T. Ely, 79, distinguished professor of economics, married one of his students a year ago, and the young lady, Mrs. Margaret Hahn-Ely, in her thirties, gave birth to a fine eight-pound boy a few days ago.

That baby ought to do something. His mother is a doctor of philosophy and his father one of the most learned men in the country. But it may turn out otherwise, and he may be just a good, strong, average American citizen.

The mother says:

"He may become a football player or a prize fighter."

She is amazed at the power of his muscles. Most mothers are thus amazed. You would be amazed, too, if you had carried a kicking baby around for a few months.

Plato, who thought fathers should be old, and mothers at an age combining maximum mental and physical strength, would be interested in the heredity of this Ely baby. Plato's own father, Ariston, traced his descent to the god, Poseidon, or Neptune as we call him. His mother, Perictione, was related to Solon, one of the seven wise men of Greece.

Night before last, in Sing Sing prison, two young murderers went to heaven or the other way via the electric chair. A third, "scheduled" for death at the same time, obtained a 24-hour stay, promising mysterious information. Of the two executed, one was 20, the other 21 years old. They killed a policeman, and both walked to the "chair" smoking cigarettes.

One of the two men, Alfred Cozzi, died 56 minutes before midnight; the other, Alfred Coorbellini, died four minutes later and they have recovered his friend on the journey to their destination. Joseph Bauman, 21 years old, was allowed 24 hours more life, because he offered to deliver a murderer unknown to the police. The theory that criminals do not "squeal" is a mistake. They squeal rapidly when the electric chair faces them.

Lord Northcliffe was right when he called Americans "very docile." Here, when we don't like a city, state or national government, we simply "lump it," and do nothing.

In Weimar, Germany, made familiar to everybody by Goethe's residence there, they are less patient. Yesterday the unemployed first wrecked the municipal employment office, then called on the mayor and beat him severely. It is regrettable, and shows how highly strung those Europeans are.

The feeling between North and South Ireland shows no improvement. Irish in the south invite the north to join in making all Ireland an independent nation, refusing to take any oath to King George, or pay England for Irish lands.

Liverpool Orangemen reply by attacking the great Catholic Cathedral there, more than 300 of them throwing bricks through beautiful stained glass windows, and singing hymns during the attack. Police are now guarding the cathedral.

POLICE SEIZE BONUS ARMY LEADERS

Just a few minutes before Walter W. Waters, a commander of the bonus army, had been arrested.

Superintendent of Police Glassford informed the bonus seekers that a Waters feud remain under arrest until the men returned to the far side of the plaza.

They did not return at once but stood shouting "We want Waters!"

HELD AS HOSTAGE

Glassford spoke:

"I told the Vice-President I'd keep this plaza clear. When I say I'll do the thing I'll do it!

"I don't want any trouble, but we will have it if you do not get back.

"I have Waters under arrest, and as soon as you go back I'll release him."

The men did not start back.

Glassford had Waters brought forward but his efforts to get them back continued to be of no avail.

Other leaders of the veterans also were placed under afrest. They were escorted into the Capitol.

Meantime, Glassford ordered all policemen off duty to report to their stations.

VET POLICE JOIN MARCH

The proceeding had remained orderly until Waters and other leaders reached the scene. He started across the plaza in the direction of the center steps at the rotunda.

The veterans began to run toward him from various directions, so that when he reached the bandstand in front of the rotunda several thousands were around him.

Glassford then attempted to have

Further killings are in the cards, in the wake of two shotgun murders within 24 hours.

The big battle which the police have feared for several years is in the making.

The whole of local gangdom, centering in spots in the North, West and South Ends, East Boston and Revere, was in a ferment today, with friends watching friends, fingers on triggers, as they had once only watched foes.

The spectacular slaying of Charles Castelone, 29, lottery and liquor lord, in the West End, following the murder of Anthony Diamente, 45, at Revere, scrapped all the gang lines in the underworld and paved the way for an open battle for control.

PACIOCCO IS CHARGED

Holding out of liquor and pool profits, underlay the Castelone crime, the Boston Evening American learned.

Meanwhile, at Revere, Joseph Paciocco of Temple st. was charged with the murder of Diamante and was taken to Chelsea court.

Paciocco was with Diamante, "benedictine king" and former Cuppa henchman, when his head was blown from his body by a shotgun charge early yesterday.

Revere police sat in on the probe of the Castelone killing for clues that might link it with Diamante's death.

Picked up for questioning in the West End murder was Salvatore Oteri, called "Big Sam" because he is six feet, three, and weighs 275 pounds.

Oteri, a partner of Castelone in various enterprises, is a cousin of "Salvy" Spitale, New York underworld figure, who acted as an agent of Col. Lindbergh in the effort to find the kidnaped baby, the Boston Evening American learned.

EXPECTS TO BE KILLED

"My partner's rubbed out," he told police. "Guess that means I'm next to go."

He was released, along with three others who were also questioned—Alfred Pranzini, 34, of Norman st., Salvatore Guiffre, South Margin st.; and Dominic Barbare of Greco st.

CURRENCY PLAN UP TO SENATE

Washington, July 16 (AP)—Senate conferees on the disputed home loan bank bill today decided to put the controversial Glass currency expansion provision up to the Senate for instructions.

Meanwhile, a move to send the unemployment relief bill back to conference with the House developed in the Senate as the result of a nation-wide pressure from banks to eliminate the provision requiring publicity on Reconstruction Corp. loans.

The House passed legislation directing the Secretary of the Treasury to make available all income tax and revenue records to the Senate banking committee. The measure was sent to the President.

Woman's Pajamas Clue in Reynolds Slaying

International News Service Staff Correspondent

Winston-Salem, N. C., July 16 (INS)—The pajama ensemble of one of the guests or of Mrs. Libby Holman Reynolds, bride of the late Smith Reynolds, youthful heir to tobacco millions, was found on the divan in the Reynolds home shortly after young Reynolds was discovered fatally wounded, International News Service learned today.

Mrs. Reynolds, former Broadway "torch" singer, had worn a set of pajamas during the evening of the party which preceded the tragedy. It consisted of a pair of duck trousers and a striped shirt.

Stuart Warnken, superintendent of the estate, testified at a private hearing of the inquest into the death of Reynolds that he found two pieces of clothing on the divan downstairs.

DISPUTE OVER TIME.

He said that one piece looked like pajama trousers and the other one was probably a coat.

The sweater and slippers of Mrs. Reynolds were subsequently found in the room occupied by Ab Walker, friend of Reynolds, held as a material witness during the investigation into the death of his chum.

Mrs. Reynolds had worn pajamas until the time she returned to the house after being missing for at least three hours, according to witnesses.

She returned at 12:30 a. m., according to W. E. Fulcher, night watchman on the estate.

Walker testified that she returned about 11:30 p. m.

Other officers and firemen arrived and with McGonnagle, carried several children to the street. Mr. and Mrs. John Timmons, who occupied the third floor, were also assisted out.

4 POWER PACT FAVORS FRANCE AGAINST GERMANY

MORE LIBERAL VIEW TAKEN IN WASHINGTON

U. S. Officials Believe Entente Cordial Will Help Solve World Problems

Washington, July 16 (INS)—Since the United States and Europe now understand each other, so to speak, on the subject of Europe's war debts, Washington officials today assumed a more liberal attitude toward the "entente cordial" effected by France and Great Britain.

President Hoover's letter to Senator Borah was accepted as defining the country's position on the debts, the "gentlemen's agreement" and the "entente cordiale." In his letter Hoover said this government had not been a party to any of the agreements recently negotiated in Europe; would not be bound by them, and would not be forced into any negotiation or position by any agreements or combination by our debtor countries.

GIVES FRANCE SECURITY

The entente cordial, in which Belgium and Italy have joined Britain and France, is viewed here today as a constructive project that should be helpful toward settling the problems confronting Europe, mainly political.

Officials believe it gives France the shadow if not the substance of the "security" her statesmen have made the cornerstone of French international policy. It is the price Britain was forced to pay for French consent to the Lausanne agreement practically cancelling Germany's reparations bill.

CHECK UPON GERMANY

While the general trend in Europe is away from the old order of alliances, balances of power, checks and counter-balances, the present entente cordial is expected to assist Premier Herriot to push the Lausanne agreement through the French Parliament on the ground that it affords France the moral support of Great Britain against possible political machinations of Germany.

Under the terms of this agreement, Germany can not reach any secret understanding with Great Britain, Italy or Belgium on such politically dangerous subjects as her Eastern frontier, the Polish corridor or an increase in the armament permitted Germany under the Versailles treaty.

All of the countries in the entente cordial are bound to discuss "fully and frankly" all developments pertaining to any questions of such general interest to Europe as these.

MacDonald's Opponents Plot for His Downfall

London, July 16 (INS)—Though Parliament has adjourned until Oct. 27, the next three months will be critical for Prime Minister MacDonald and his National government.

Only the recess prevented a climax being reached in plans to oust MacDonald and re-establish actual party government. The "gentleman's agreement" of the Lausanne conference and the secrecy surrounding it would have furnished the chief weapon of the opposition.

The entente with France has furnished ammunition to the opposition, which asserts that the pact may cause distrust and suspicion in America as well as in Europe.

The French view that England and France will deal together on the American war debts has caused many supporters of the pact to feel that it was a mistake.

VALERA FACING FIGHT FOR HIS POLITICAL LIFE

All Hope for Averting Tariff War With Britain Fades; President Off for Dublin

London, July 16 (INS)—All hope of averting a tariff war between England and the Irish Free State was abandoned today as President De Valera left Dublin to fight for his political life and Prime Minister MacDonald departed for Scotland for a vacation.

The hopelessness of the situation was admitted by William Norton, leader of the Irish Labor party, whose efforts brought about last night's conference between De Valera and MacDonald—conference that failed because the Irish President stood firm in his refusal to pay the land annuities which were due on June 30.

"What will be the next step?" said Norton as he was arranging to accompany De Valera. "Well, I suppose the guns will begin to bark—that is to say, retaliatory measures will be taken by both sides. The Irish Free State tariff bill will be put into effect as soon as possible.

"There seems to be no loophole left for further negotiations."

The Irish tariff bill was passed yesterday in Dublin by a vote of 68 to 57. Its victory in the Dail Eireann indicates that it will have a safe majority when taken up by the Senate on Monday. The English tariff bill is already in effect.

Large interest centered today in the declaration of De Valera's foes that failure to avert a trade crisis with England would mean loss of the Irish Labor party's support and his political death.

This was refuted by Norton, who has been a loyal supporter of De Valera in the present crisis.

The Labor party will still support De Valera," said Norton. "It considers he put forward a reasonable basis of discussion. This was rejected."

From Far Chile

SENORA SIGREN FOR CHILD CURB

There are many things to be admired in this country, but American parents give their children too much liberty, according to Senora Manuel Sigren, who arrived in Boston to join her husband, the Chilean consul.

With their 2-year-old son, Raoul, who accompanied his mother on the journey from South America, the couple are installed at 5 Braemore rd., Brighton.

Senora Sigren, who speaks Spanish, French, German and English, is a pianist of note, having given concerts in Europe, where she received her musical education. She also taught at the National Academy of Music in Chile.

The young matron expressed admiration for American schools and colleges and said she would like to have her son educated here.

"You have some lovely trees in Boston," she said, "and your municipal park system is beautiful. We rode along some of the beaches the other day and the scene was lovely."

ROOSEVELT AND COL. HOUSE IN CONFERENCE

Wilson's Old Friend Talks an Hour With 1932 Democratic Nominee on Yawl

International News Service Staff Correspondent
By RAYMOND I. BORST

Aboard Yacht Marcon, off Gloucester, July 16 (INS)—While his 40-foot yawl bobbed around in Marblehead harbor today, Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt discussed his presidential campaign with Col. Edward M. House, "strong man" in the Wilson administration.

The Governor had just finished his breakfast when Col. House came out from the shore in a small boat and stepped aboard the yawl.

While Roosevelt was having breakfast, a yacht bearing Edward A. Taft of Boston pulled alongside.

"Hello, Ed, how are you?" the Governor called out.

"Fine, Governor, and how are you?"

"I'm having the time of my life."

Taft was secretary of the 1904 class at Harvard, of which the Governor was permanent chairman.

When Roosevelt was asked if he intended to follow President Hoover's action in cutting his own salary, he smiled and said:

"Wait till after the fourth of next March."

Only a light breeze was blowing and the governor expressed some doubt whether he would be able to reach Portsmouth, N. H., the end of the cruise, by tonight.

The governor insisted he would not make a political speech at the reception which will be staged for him late at Hampton Beach by New England Democrats.

NO SUNDAY SPEECH

"I never talk politics on Sunday," the governor declared.

Told that his New England admirers were planning to turn out 100,000 strong for the reception, the governor said:

"That's fine, but I am not going to say anything about the campaign."

Roosevelt plans to spend Sunday night at the summer home of his friend James, at Little Boar's Head, and start back for Albany early Monday.

"The cruise doesn't end officially until 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon," the Governor said, in announcing he would spend tonight aboard the yawl though they reached Portsmouth.

New Hampshire Is Ready to Hail Roosevelt

The nominee will be greeted at Portsmouth Navy Yard by Chairman Robert F. Gould of the New Hampshire Democratic Committee, Dr. Samuel T. Ladd, in charge of arrangements, and delegates from Maine and Vermont.

The guest will be taken to the Portsmouth Yacht Club and will then start for Hampton Beach, with a brief halt in Market sq., Portsmouth, where Roosevelt will be welcomed by Mayor Fernando W. Hartford.

the men disperse and return to their places opposite the plaza. Failing in this, Waters and others were taken into custody.

At the request of Roy W. Robertson, leader of the California veterans' group, the military police set up by the veterans, early in the morning had removed their armbands and joined in the march.

"If there is going to be any police in this business," Robertson said, 'the District of Columbia can furnish them."

HOOVER DECLINES

Eugene F. Everett, representing Waters, had told newspapermen at the White House earlier that he had failed in an effort to get an interview for Waters with President Hoover for today.

Everett said one of the President's secretaries had informed him the chief executive was too occupied.

Everett said he informed White House officials that despite the plan of one wing of the bonus army to picket the White House after the adjournment of Congress, the main body under Waters would not take part in any such movement, believing it "undignified."

Everett said Waters wanted to request the President personally to ask Congress to recess rather than adjourn so that bonus legislation might be enacted.

Meanwhile, Mr. Hoovers' desire to have the bonus-seeking veterans leave the capital remained unaltered. He signed a House joint resolution extending until July 25 the time in which veterans may apply for money under the $100,000 fund for transportation to their homes. The original deadline for obtaining this transportation fell today before yesterday at midnight.

UNDER OLD GLORY

The veterans at the Capitol gestured toward taking the front steps from control of policemen, but were herded back on to the plaza without major trouble.

Flag bearers of the veterans continued to wave the stars and stripes.

Boos and cries went up as plain clothesmen went among the crowd to weed out leaders.

The situation was tense. Leaders of the marchers spoke to them from the band stand and a nurse urged them to maintain order.

Somerville Flier Injured in Landing

Boston Man Jailed for Threat to Girl

Red Wing, Minn., July 16—William Vannoberg, 35, of Boston, was held today because, officers said, he threatened Miss Edna Gustofson and her parents with death unless she married him. Officers said a second degree assault charge was pending.

Police Win His Money, Then Arrest Him for Gambling

You cant tell Peter Goopoulos he hasn't all the bad luck there is.

Two men entered his fruit store in Bennington st., East Boston, today, changed a quarter for five nickels and started to play two slot machines in the store.

Luck—that's all it was for one of them, because he won $1. Then he asked Peter to change the handful of nickels for a bill.

"You're not gonna quit now, are you?" asked Peter.

"Sure I am," said the winner. "I'm ahead now."

"Well, hope to see you again some time," said Peter. "Maybe I'll have the luck."

"I don't think so," said Sergt. William Cripps, flashing his badge.

MOTORISTS IN FISTIC DUEL

A couple of angry automobilists, who became pugilistically inclined after a slight collision, threw the Salem st. section of Malden into a slight uproar when they chased each other in their cars, collided twice on purpose, and finally ended their escapade when a Malden policeman placed one under arrest.

After a collision, the pair are alleged to have "fought it out" in the field of Salem st., but the fight did not end matters, for the losing autoist chased the winner along Salem st. to Broadway sq.

A second fight resulted, with Patrolman Schroeffel arresting Charles E. Parler, 35, of Salem st., Malden, for assault and battery on Daniel Newhaus of Albany st., South End.

BORAH STUDIES SEAWAY PACT

Washington, July 16 (AP)—A Senate committee is going to spend part of the summer studying—but not suspiciously—the new St. Lawrence seaway treaty.

The plan, so Senator Borah (R.) of Idaho told the Senate in asking adoption of a resolution for the survey, is to develop all the facts so they can be offered when the agreement is presented for ratification in December.

"The resolution is for a bona fide investigation of all matters bearing on the treaty," Borah said, "it is not based on suspicion."

Before the Senate agreed to set a sub-committee of the foreign relations committee into the hearings, Borah promised that if Governor Roosevelt wanted to be heard he would be.

LOST SOCIETY WOMAN HOME

Mrs. Sally Stetson, 56, wife of Graydon Stetson, financier, returned to her Beacon Hill home while Wellesley and Boston police were conducting a wide search for her following her disappearance from the Wellesley home of a friend yesterday.

No explanation was furnished for Mrs. Stetson's disappearance by her husband, who refused to talk to reporters. He declared she had been visiting friends and was now at home and asleep. He insisted there was nothing mysterious about the incident.

Grenfell Ship Fire Quelled by Crew

Sydney, N. S., July 16 (AP)—The Grenfell mission ship, which carries medical supplies and good cheer to unfortunates in Labrador and Newfoundland, has had trouble of her own, officials here learned today.

After leaving St. Anthony, Newfoundland, last week on her regular tour of mercy, fire broke out in the engine room. Heroic work on the part of the crew prevented serious damage.

If Mrs. Reynolds discarded her costume downstairs she must have done it within half an hour of the time the pistol shot killed her young husband, the secret testimony showed.

Meanwhile Sheriff Scott was considering possible jealousy of Smith Reynolds as reflected in the testimony of witnesses contained in the secret records of the coroner.

Ab Walker, the last person at the party to see Smith Reynolds alive, was asked if Smith was jealous of his wife.

"As far as reason for being jealous, I don't know," said Walker.

Q.—I didn't ask you whether he had cause—I asked if he was exceedingly jealous about his wife? A.—I don't know. He was scared of their happiness.

JEALOUSY DENIED

C.—Will you answer the question as to whether or not he was jealous? A.—I don't know.

Q.—Had anything ever passed between you and Mr. Reynolds in regard to intimacies with his wife? A.—No.

Q.—Except this one time when he said he didn't accuse you of being intimate with her? A.—Yes, sir.

(This last referred to the incident at the lakehouse on the estate when Mrs. Libby Holman Reynolds put her arm about Walker and whispered something in his ear and Smith later told Walker he had seen it, but didn't blame Walker for anything that happened.)

Q.—Haven't you repeatedly made the statement to people here since this occurred that he was jealous of Mrs. Reynolds? A.—I have said this—[illegible] to my mind is interpreting another man being involved in the woman's life. But he was scared that there was going to be something.

Q.—Do you say then that he was suspicious of her? A.—No, sir.

CAUSED FOR HAPPINESS

Q.—What do you mean when you say he thought something would become involved? A.—I mean he was looking into the future. The reason I say this is because in the conversation in the hotel he said: "Well, even if we do go this winter, I would be from 8 o'clock in the morning all day in school and she wouldn't get away from the theater until probably 1 o'clock and we would never see each other." He was afraid something was going to break up this happiness of his.

(Walker was referring to the night he and Reynolds spent away from home in a local hotel at which they discussed the plans of Reynolds for a second trip around the world.)

Q.—Did Mr. Reynolds have any conversation with Mrs. Reynolds remaining on the stage? A.—No, sir. Mrs. Reynolds had asked if he did not want her to give up the stage and he said: "By no means." Also in his conversation in the hotel he told me it was the last thing he would ever want her to do, that if she would ask him to give up aviation he would be terribly hurt, but would do it and it would be the same thing with her.

GETS WARNING THAT SON WILL BE KIDNAPED

Foreman of Probers in Florida Prison Scandal Defies Foes to Do Their Worst

Jacksonville, Fla., July 16 (INS)—Although a series of sinister warnings failed to mature into action, police today sought the authors of kidnaping and death threats against Al F. Gorman, foreman of the Duval County grand jury that indicted two State Prison guards for the alleged "torture murder" of Arthur Maillefert, 22-year-old New Jersey youth.

Gorman received the threats by mail and telephone. The telephone threat intimated his only son would be kidnaped unless he ceased his activities as foreman of the grand jury, which is now investigating the administration of nearby state prison camps.

AUTOS CIRCLE HOME

Gorman said today several mysterious automobiles circled his home late last night but no attempt was made to carry out the threats.

He said that one of the threatening letters, warning him' his life would be forfeited if he failed to obey its directions, called on him to halt his inquiry into prison camp conditions.

Another letter demanded he "lay off Denmark." This referred to C. L. Denmark, one of the prison guards who disappeared the night Maillefert died a "torture death" at the nearby Sunbeam prison camp.

Denmark has been sought ever since for questioning by the grand jury. He was reported to know all about the treatment accorded young Maillefret prior to his death. The grand jury already has indicted Guard Capt. George W. Courson and Guard Solomon M. Higginbotham on charges of first degree murder in connection with the boy's death.

RECALLS LINDY CASE

Gorman reported a third threat by telephone, in which some unidentified person threatened to kidnap his only son. He said the author of the threat first asked him whether he had a son named Herbert.

When he replied in the affirmative, he said, the voice added:

"Well, you know about the Lindbergh case? Unless you stop this investigation, your son will be kidnaped."

"I am not worried by these threats," Gorman said today. "I intend to conduct an unbiased investigation of the administration of prison camps in this county, regardless of the outcome. Threats will not stop me."

The grand jury's action in indicting two guards for the murder of Maillefert Sat had two contrasting effects on the people of Florida. Most of the people condemned the actions of the guards and approved the grand jury's action.

LOST 17 DAYS IN MEXICO AFTER STORM CRASH

Friend Killed, American Fights Disease, Insects and Beasts in Winning Life Battle

Mexico City, July 16 (AP)—Little by little today, as a quavering and halting voice came back to him, Clarence McElroy, American aviator who was rescued yesterday from the Mexican jungle, was able to tell snatches of the horror through which he lived for 17 days.

McElroy was brought to the town of San Geronimo yesterday by a searching party. He was half dead from starvation, thirst and an injured leg. He had been missing since June 27 when he took off from Vera Cruz in a plane he was flying to Honduras for delivery.

Roy Gordon, American resident of Tegucigalpa, Honduras, who was flying with him, was killed in a crash in a terrific tropical storm.

NO FOOD OR WATER

The crash of the ship after the motor failed left McElroy badly hurt, without food or water, with no knowledge of Spanish or of how to combat or escape the deadly perils of a tropical jungle.

With almost unbelievable fortitude, however, he tried to arrange the wreckage to protect the body of his companion as well as possible from jungle beasts. This done, he made an attempt to dress his injured leg and then struck out to the west, knowing the low mountain range and civilization lay beyond.

Constantly on the alert to escape snakes, wild beasts and disease, and fighting off tropical insects, McElroy crawled his painful way through the tangled thicket.

JUNGLE IMPASSABLE

Yet so handicapped was he that he estimates he only covered four miles in nearly three weeks of crawling. The jungle at the point is well-night impassable and he had no tools to cut through.

McElroy's first agonized request, made by signs, was for water. He was given milk and cheese by the relief expedition and later put on a strict diet. He constantly called for more water.

The aviator said that he would have died of thirst except that he was able to catch small quantities of rain water during the frequent tropical downpours. He obtained some nourishment from fruits, but he was in constant fear he would select some poisonous variety.

GIRLS VICTIMS IN NEW RACKET

A new racket was revealed to police today, with a woman and four girls as victims and an unidentified man, about 35 years old, the gainer by $32.

Miss Helen F. Doherty, a dressmaker at 584 Washington st., said that on Thursday the man went into her shop with four girls and ordered middy blouses to be made for them, to wear as waitresses in an inn or tearoom at Marion.

A price of $3 each was made and each girl turned over $3 to the man, who told them to meet him in the shop at 4 p. m. Friday, when the blouses were to be done and when he would pay the $12 for them.

The girls were on hand at the appointed time and tried on their blouses, but the man didn't appear.

Warmer Tomorrow; Possible Showers

You may have showers for that trip tomorrow—and then again you may not. At any rate, it will be warmer than today and considerably warmer than last night, when the temperature fell to just above freezing in some points in Maine and there was frost on the ground.

Happy Because He Gets Life Term, Not Year of Torture

Syracuse, N. Y., July 16 (INS)—The happiest man today in Auburn prison was, by his own admission, Robert Walker, who successfully pleaded for a life sentence rather than a one-year term, for which he had a chance.

It was his firm conviction he escaped from dreadful tortures in a Michigan prison which would have killed him or driven him insane.

Walker, who sometimes called himself Huntington, said he escaped from prison at Jackson, Mich. Under a fourth-offender law in that state, he said, he would be "disciplined" for six months of a mandatory life sentence.

"For the first two months they put you for six hours every day into a circular steel cell with only room to stand," he told County Judge Barnum.

"The rest of the 24 hours you are kept in solitary and they feed you bread and water once a day.

"For the next two months you are in solitary confinement and you get bread and water twice a day, with a meal every five days.

"The last two months of the six, if you live and haven't gone insane, you're still in the solitary, but you get your meals."

STABLE RAZED BY $15,000 FIRE

A large stable and a milk house on the old Bennett estate, at Main and Howard sts., Saugus, one of the show places of the town, were destroyed by fire of undetermined origin today. The loss was estimated at $15,000.

Both structures were enveloped in flames when firemen arrived.

In addition to a large quantity of hay, and milk pasteurizing equipment, four autos owned by employes of C. B. Prescott, milk dealer who leases the buildings, were destroyed.

There were no horses in the barn. Firemen saved the mansion house occupied by Philip H. Spencer, Malden policeman, present owner of the estate, and his brother, Charles Spencer, of the Saugus police department. They were driven out with their families.

The place is on the new boulevard from Melrose to the Newburyport Turnpike, and traffic was tied up for some time.

Disillusioned U. S. Women End Indian Marital Life

Panama City, July 16 (AP)—Two American women, a mother and her daughter, who married members of the diminutive San Blas Indian tribe which inhabits the north coast of Panama and surrounding Islands, are waiting here for transportation to New York, their matrimonial careers ended.

They are Gladys Brown, who married William White Eagle in Akron, Ohio, in 1930, and her mother, Cora, who married Charles Williams in New York. Mrs. Williams is 45.

They sailed for Panama January 23 of this year and lived in the San Blas territory until recently. The women said their husbands showed a preference for the native girls.

Akron, O., July 16 (AP)—An appeal to the Red Cross to return the two who married Indians was planned by Ray Hagerman, a rubber worker here who said the women are his mother and half-sister.

Hagerman said the women had written Red Cross headquarters at Cristobal, Canal Zone, saying "when we were married our husbands said they belonged to a civilized tribe, but we have been deceived."

The women also complained they were "compelled to sleep on boards in a leaky hut. The food is terrible and unless taken away from here we shall surely die."

BABY MURDERED CORONER SAYS

Minneapolis, Minn., July 16—Coroner E. B. Thurston announced he had found evidence indicating that 20-months-old Leslie Delano was murdered.

The child's body was found in a cesspool about 150 feet from his own home. Posses of police, citizens and national guards had been searching for him for five days, in the belief he had been kidnaped.

Finding of the body so near the home of the child's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Delano, led at first to a belief the death was accidental.

STORE ROBBED SECOND TIME

Victim of bandits for the second time within a month, John McDonough of Mission ave., Dorchester, manager of a chain store at 14 Hancock st., today decided the Fields Corner crime wave had gone too far.

Less than a month ago bandits entered the store and robbed him. Today the breaking point was reached when the bandits waited for his arrival to open the place and then held him up.

The youthful pair, one armed, entered the store early today and departed $5 richer after loeing the cash register while holding McDonough up at gunpoint.

McDonough wanted to offer resistance, but the argument of the bandit gun was too much for him.

But he told police he is tired of holdups and that the next time bandits appear there he will cause them trouble.

With a heavy iron pipe as a weapon, two bandits about 20 years old and wearing sweaters, held up Angelo Theriault of 39 Hancock st., Salem, in the office of the Danvers Laundry at Danversport today and robbed him of $25.

Theriault, who had just entered the office with laundry he had collected for a subsidiary firm, to be done at the laundry, evidently was mistaken for the proprietor as he was the only man in the office when the bandit pair entered.

While one held the pipe over Theriault's head and threatened to kill him, the other bandit went through his pockets.

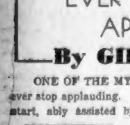
By GILBERT SELDES

ONE OF THE MYSTERIES of the theater is why audiences ever stop applauding. For ten years I tried to discover why they start, ably assisted by that eminent enemy of audiences, Mr. Robert Benchley, who, in turn, enlisted the potent aid of Mr. Bernard Shaw. My pet hate is applause for players when they make their first appearance, and this usually takes place only on opening nights. Mr. Benchley hates, more than anything else, premature applause before a song and dance number is ended; he likes to hear the music to which the hoofer hoofs. To him Mr. Shaw wrote: "Imagine an orchestral symphony stopped every three bars or so by the audience brawling their delight at a pretty progression or a rousing fortissimo, as operas are interrupted in Italy!"



GILBERT SELDES

Don't Laugh!

Mr. Shaw, incidentally, is also opposed to laughter. "I have had performances of my plays prolonged 25 minutes beyond the rehearsal time," he writes, "by incontinent heehawings from the very people who, complained afterward that they had to leave before the end to catch their trains. As to acting, it is impossible under such circumstances except by snatches." I'm afraid most writers of comedies would not care to suppress laughter; just as most players would object to a note in the program asking the audience to wait until the end of the act before applauding actors who may, after all, turn in bad performances.

Keep on Forever

Granting that applause does start when Miss Doe swims lightly on the stage, exactly why does it stop? Miss Doe pretends (a) that she is surprised, and (b) that she is overcome with eagerness to get into her lines; but the audience knows (a) that she would have been hurt if the applause had not come, and (b) that she doesn't give a hang for Shakespeare, O'Neill and Oscar Wilde put together, and would stand there half an hour and make little bows and look pathetic and sweet if only the applause would keep up. Now, as the audience is not applauding her evening's work, which has just begun, but is applauding either her past performance or her personality, why ever end the handclapping? Perhaps Miss Blank, the night before, got a minute and a half; then, surely, Miss Doe is entitled to two minutes; and in a month of many openings, at the end, old Mrs. Wherchehin, the great old lady of the American stage, will be applauded 85 minutes, thus completing the running time of Act One and making it much easier for us all to understand the play.

A Good Entrance

Jed Harris once solved the problem prettily. He brought Miss Lillian Gish on the stage in "Uncle Vanya," had her walk clean across it slowly, and then disappear. That short stroll, the opening night, exactly paralleled the duration of the applause; Miss Gish, having no lines to speak at that point, returned later to speak without being interrupted. In "Show Boat," by way of contrast, Paul Robeson is revealed at the end of a song in which two of the other principals gain much honor. The confusion of motives in the applause is such that the beginning of the play's best song cannot be heard. A few weeks ago, when Jane Cowl appeared, the first-night applause nearly answered my question, for it threatened not to stop until Miss Cowl broke into a song and dance. That, obviously, is what audiences want, and I don't see why they don't get it. It's their money in the box office, isn't it?

The Old Malacca

In the midst of world-shaking events it is good to know that the industry of selling walking-sticks to Londoners has recovered. Things had looked black for the British Empire until a few months ago; the blood of England was running thin and gentlemen were appearing without canes. The upturn came, of course, with the downward swing of the pound sterling. By Easter a million sticks had been sold for the holidays and the commerce has continued brisk. The heroes of P. G. Wodehouse's stories need not be drawn standing erect; they can again, with fidelity to life, lean or point.

The Knob

What worried me about the disappearance of the cane was to know what Englishmen would do when perplexities arrive. Such as—what tie to wear, what flowers to send and which night club to patronize. At these crises in the lives of aristocrats, if I remember my books, they always suck the knobs of their walking-sticks. (They prefer sticks with knobs especially made for that purpose.) I was afraid they would take to sucking their thumbs; but that undignified spectacle has been spared us. England has regained her poise, her strength and her mastery. She has recovered her walking-sticks.

MRS. WILLIAM HOUSTON GREENE of Ledgewood Shippings, Bluehill, is entertaining the entire company and staff of the Surry Playhouse at a tea on Sunday afternoon. Mr. Leighton Rollins, director of the Surry Players, has sent out invitations to the sponsors and subscribers for the annual stunt night party at the Playhouse on Sunday, July 31.

MR. AND MRS. RICHARD C. STOREY, JR., are receiving congratulations on the birth of their second son, Bayard Thayer Storey, who was born on July 13 at Hamilton. Mrs. Storey is the daughter of Mrs. Bayard Thayer of Boston and Lancaster.

MR. AND MRS. RALPH GRAY are crossing the continent in their car, stopping at overnight camps, and will meet their son and daughter, Mr. Charles Merriman, and Miss Alice Merriman at San Diego. Alice will return with them for her debut in November.

MISS ELIZABETH WELLS, who so much enjoys the summer life at Wianno, and who recently underwent an operation for appendicitis at Cape Cod Hospital, is now on the road to recovery. Mr. and Mrs. Channing McG. Wells, her parents, are making preparations for their son's wedding, which is to take place early in September. "Greg" was one of the most popular men in his class of '26 at Harvard. He looks very sporty driving along the shore in his aluminum touring car.

MRS. ANDREW ADIE HAS just returned with Mrs. Channing Wells to Wianno, after a visit at the Well's Colonial house and large estate in Southbridge.

THE NORA SALTONSTALL prize at Winsor School was won this year by Mary Hutchins of Dedham, so Mary goes to Paris to study for a year. How delightful. One year Molly Frothingham won it and went to Paris; also Arlene Kilham, who went and studied painting for a year, and when she returned she won first place in the exhibition at the Junior League. This prize is given by Mrs. Robert Saltonstall in memory of her daughter, Nora. Of course the winner has to postpone her coming out for a year later, but who cares.

THE ROBERT ANDERSONS of Chicago gave a large dinner party recently at their house in Osterville. Some of the guests were Jimmey and Grace Madden, Ella Drexel and the du Ponts. Elizabeth Wells was much missed. The Wianno Club is in full swing, with no signs of summer depression.

WORD IS RECEIVED THAT Mrs. John Lodge (Francesca Braggiotti) is not taking any acting part, or understudy position of any kind at Hollywood. She is shut up in a speaking box and in the mouthpiece for Greta Garbo. Francesca speaks all the Italian and Spanish required for Greta's part, and on the screen it seems as if Greta was speaking both those languages. Mrs. Lodge is being paid a large fee, and she is doing it for the advantages of her child. Her voice is very beautiful, low and soft, while Greta can speak neither Spanish nor Italian. Francesca was born in Italy and has lived in Spain.

MRS E. C. CROSSETT OF Chicago and Osterville opened her house about a week ago for a sale of the needlework of the Woman's Exchange of Chicago. Everyone turned out as the Crossetts are benefactors of the Cape and their place is a vision of beauty. Their estate will be opened again on August 9 (not to the public this time, as it is the wedding day of their daughter, Elizabeth). The Crossetts are important lumber people of Chicago and they build up a place wherever they are.

SPEAKING OF HOLLYWOOD, perhaps you have been fortunate to be allowed to enter Bedford Hills, which is some distance outside Hollywood, where the Berrys have a fascinating home, Mr. and Mrs. Berry are proteges of Mr. Harry Sleeper and he built the house for them. We have not seen or heard of them on the screen as yet, but no doubt we will.

Mrs. Hutton, although reported critically ill, conferred with her attorneys over action to be taken against her former associate for his authorship of an "expose" of her career. Rev. Mr. Goben had been discharged from the Temple payroll by Mrs. Hutton.

The attorneys said they would confer with the district attorney's office over what they termed as "scurrilous attack upon the reputation of Mrs. Hutton" and that they also would file a civil suit against Goben. The book appeared for sale yesterday.

BOOKS—and a Number of Things

By Charles Hanson Towne

It is a wonder to me that any fairly large parties in a city like New York ever come off with even a semblance of success.

In the first place, if a hostess aims at the right kind of dinner she is obliged (such are the busy conditions here) to ask her guests many days—even weeks—in advance. If this is done by mail the invitations are, naturally, answered by letter, too; and there are always dilatory people who fail to respond promptly, even to the most pressing letters.

These will glance, aimlessly, at their engagement books and discover that they have nothing to do on the evening mentioned by their hostess. They could send an acceptance, therefore, at once; but a little temperament creeps in that morning. Perhaps the breakfast coffee wasn't just right, or maybe the cook had given notice. At any rate, Mrs. X doesn't feel like committing herself to an evening so far away. She puts aside her dearest friend's note and within 24 hours it has completely passed from her mind.

A week goes by with Mrs. A. anxiously awaiting a response. Not only has Mrs. X. failed to remember Emily Post's Book of Etiquette, but so have Mrs. C. and Mrs. D.

With a generous heart she suspects that they may be out of town and mentally forgives them on that score. But she has a natural wish to keep her dinner as she had first planned it. So she asks a servant to telephone to each residence.

Yes, comes the answer from another servant; Mrs. X. and Mrs. C. and Mrs. D are in the city, but they are out for the afternoon and will not be at home until ten time.

Distracted, Mrs. A. herself telephones at that hour, only to be asked to leave a message, as all the ladies are engaged. This she hopefully does.

The following morning two send regrets and the other accepts on the condition that she could come without her husband, if that would be all right, my dear.

Mrs. A. is glad to have even a partial acceptance as it were. Her problem now is to find a single man to take the place of Mr. X.

She has an inspiration. That fascinating bachelor, Mr. O., would be just the man. She calls him—not letter this time—finds he is too popular to be invited only three weeks ahead, and again looks up her list of eligible dinner men, and sees the name of Mr. F.

He is free and accepts with almost too much alacrity: but she snatches at him as a hungry beggar might seize a sandwich. But the moment she rings off, terrified, she recalls that Mrs. X. loathes and despises Mr. F. It is to be a large dinner, however, and so she can separate them, putting them leagues apart at the vast table. In the confusion of serving the prepandial cocktails they will scarcely see each other, and afterward the men will foregather for such a long time that there will be little chance for an encounter between Mrs. X. and Mr. F.

Unless they should inadvertently be placed at the same intimate bridge table! But she determines to see that this shall not in any circumstance happen. She must remember, however, and she makes a distracted mental note.

Then a husband can accept, but not his wife; for Lily is sailing on the Bremen. Which means finding exactly the right widow or girl. A far more complex problem than capturing a single man. But Miss L. is corraled.

Two days before the dinner five people drop out because of an attack of influenza, and poor Mrs. A. begins all over again rearranging her table, wondering if P. and Q. will get on with W. and Y., and otherwise spending her energy in the hopeless task of giving a successful metropolitan dinner.

It isn't, now, the party she had planned at all. It is a hodge-podge, heterogeneous affair, and Mrs. A. wonders at the last moment if the place cards have been rewritten with exactness. It would be a tragedy if Mrs. M. found herself labelled as Mrs. T.

Finally, 30 people sit down, half of whom do not know one another, and hope, in their hearts, during the fish course that they will never see one another again. Some do not play bridge and three women languish alone when three selfish men go home early on the plea that they have hard work to do on the morrow.

Mrs. A. weeps at midnight, alone in her room, at the failure of what originally was to have been her best dinner of the season. And that night she has a nightmare, when she called in the corner policeman to make a fourth at bridge.

But this is a pre-depression story. There aren't any dinners like this any more; and there may not be so many harassed hostesses for many years to come. But something even better than this will emerge from these worrying times.

Geneva, July 16 (INS)—Adjournment of the international disarmament conference before the end of next week was predicted today as the result of the inability of the leading powers to agree on any schema for arms reduction.

CONVICT SLAIN IN BREAK

Los Angeles, July 16 (US)—In a desperate bid for freedom, one convicted bandit was shot and killed by guards, and two others were so seriously wounded they are expected to die.

Under sentence to San Quentin prison for a series of robberies, J. P. Brady, Bert McBride and Roy Brent, were being taken from the County jail to Long Beach, for resentencing in another case. Deputies E. E. Pealer and Jack Wilmot were in the front seat and the handcuffed prisoners rode in back of an automobile.

"Kill a man a day" must be the order that has gone out in the gang war which is sweeping over Greater Boston, for that's what they're doing. Photo-diagram shows you in minute detail how Charles Castelone, lottery and liquor racketeer, was shot and clubbed to death in the West End, the second victim in the bloody warfare to "rule" Boston's liquor traffic. The picture shows Lowell st., the murder scene, the fence the dying man's car crashed and the spot where a pole had stood before the "wild" auto felled it. Lives of scores of persons were endangered by bullets, the car and sizzling electric wires. Police today are out with orders to "get" the gangsters, guard all gun stores and armories. (Staff photo.)

St. Louis, July 16 (AP)—Happy days are here again for many St. Louis cats and dogs. Henry C. Babcock, aged oil broker who liked animals, "the plainer the better," left his $86,000 estate to take care of them.

Gang warfare, which last night snuffed out the life of Charles Castelone of East Boston, its second victim in two days, almost caused injury to several pedestrians when, in Lowell st., West End, Castelone's auto, its driver slumped over the wheel, crashed through a fence and plunged into an excavation. Diagram shows course of car.

buried at Castelone in recent weeks by other racketeers, accusing him of holding out liquor and lottery profits.

But half of gangland laughed at the idea that Castelone was a double-crosser. They charged his accusers with trying to get him in trouble for their own advantage.

POLICE JOIN WAR

Matters came to a head swiftly. Rumors were current he was to be slain. A parley in Bowdoin sq. last night failed to forestall the killing.

Saiva ("Big Sam") Oteri of South Boston, a partner of slain Charles Castelone, who was taken into custody for questioning.

And Castelone, driving through Lowell st., a block from the North station, went to his death with his jaw torn away by shotgun slugs, while his car bucked through a sidewalk crowd, and crashed down a light pole and several live wires.

Denouncing the arrogant disregard for innocent bystanders, Capt. John M. Anderson, in charge of the headquarters plain clothes squad, ordered every member of the squad to get busy on the Castelone case.

"They're firing away as if this were a wild west prairie," he said. "It's up to you all to get the goods on them."

He assigned Sergt. John E. Holmes and Special Officer John Connell to join Sergt. Louis Di Sessa and Special Officer Peter Di Sessa, who had worked all night on the murder. Joy at station had seven men on the investigation.

The records and backgrounds of Castelone's associates were brought out by police as they launched their probe of his murder.

Castelone, Oteri and Barbare were all arrested in 1930 for the wild shooting affray in Norman st., in which scores of men, women and children were menaced. Nobody was convicted in that case.

Oteri made frequent trips between Brooklyn and Boston, retaining his friendships in the New York area, where he had a police record before he shifted his operations.

Under the name of Thomas Oteri, he was arrested here on a larceny charge, and the case was nolle prossed for lack of evidence. Meanwhile he had been arrested as a suspicious person, but a charge of carrying a loaded revolver was dismissed in municipal court.

The Norman st. affray brought him into custody for assault with intent to kill on August 31, 1930. The next month he was arrested as a suspicious person and gave his name as Sam Schwartz. Once in federal court, on a prohibition charge, he was given a year and a day. That was in May, 1929.

Among charges made against Castelone by underworld figures was that he "held out" lottery collections of $2700 without splitting. But his friends insisted he was a "square-shooter," regardless of any appearances to the contrary.

BULLETS MATCH UP

Inspector Harry Pierce of the headquarters homicide squad announced that the shotgun pellets found in Castelone's body were exactly like those in the body of Diamante, the handsome benedictine agent.

Castelone was married and had several children, living in Medford. They formerly lived in East Boston.

His murder threw the West End into an uproar.

The murder victim was driving alone through Lowell st., and was passing between Willard and Barton sts.

A shotgun barked. Castelone's jaw was torn away. His car bucked across the curb, narrowly missed passersby, including persons on their way from the Esplanade concert. It crashed down a light pole, the sputtering wires menacing a dozen bystanders.

The wild machine, controlled only by a man whose life was ebbing swiftly away, then plunged through a fence at Lowell and Barton st., and ended over-hanging an excavation at the new state public works building.

Spectators said the killers, in another car, followed the trail of blood, dragged Castelone from his car and started to club him to death before fleeing.

CASTELONE LAST DAY

This afternoon police announced Oteri and other associates of Castelone would probably be re-questioned.

Salvadore Spitale, who was one of the gangland go-betweens in the Lindbergh ransom negotiations, is a cousin of "Big Sam" Oteri.

An officer was also dispatched to find a man seen with Castelone in Norman st., about 10 o'clock last night. Castelone was on his way from this place to his home in Medford when killed.

While he was in the Norman st. place a relative was parleying with his enemies and left the conference, his understood, with the belief that peace had been made.

But it wasn't long before he found that Castelone was being watched all the time, and was trailed, apparently, from Norman st. to the death scene.

Reports that Castelone's lottery partnerships were recently dissolved are also being investigated.

His wife told police he left home at 7 o'clock last night, saying he was going to Boston. He had been out of the hospital only a few days, having undergone a nose operation.

"I know nothing about his business except that he ran a restaurant," said his wife. "He was a good husband and father and he loved his family."

Information relating to large shipments of booze from a cache in Everett is being looked into. Castelone was a wholesale distributor of liquor.

BIG LIQUOR RACKET

The pool racket has been breeding gang hatred not only here but in other New England cities for months. A Chicago man, allegedly trying to "muscle into" the racket in Providence was recently arrested for assault with a dangerous weapon.

Providence police, spurred into action, arrested Francis A. Delano, 25, of New Bedford today, and he was fined $50 for participation in the racket.

Efforts are being made to determine whether the Boston racket was linked with those in Providence, New Bedford and other centers.

One mob was recently punished in New Bedford for selling tickets to high school students who were using their lunch money to buy the tickets. Benjamin Shuier of Worcester is serving a life term at State Prison for nearly killing a New Bedford real estate dealer, who mistaken for a man marked for death in a lottery row.

When Pacheco was arraigned in Chelsea court today, three of his brothers arrived from New York and expressed horror at the charge, declaring they were cousins of Diamante. The accused was best man at Diamante's wedding.

They set out to engage counsel for their brother.

LORD PLUMER, BRITISH WAR LEADER, DIES

London, July 16 (AP)—Field Marshal Lord Plumer, one of the chief commanders of the British army during the World War, died today.

He was first commander of the 5th Army Corps and then of the second army of the British expeditionary force in France. He also commanded the expeditionary force in Italy.

Lord Plumer was 74 years old.

It was in 1876 that he joined the York and Lancaster regiment and saw his first active service in the Sudan. His first important appointment was in command of troops in the Matabele rebellion of 1896.

In those days he had some of the idiosyncrasies which made the British army officer a butt for music hall comedians. He was a dandy in dress, he wore a monocle, and he pronounced his "r's" like "w's."

But those of his first command who tried to take advantage of what they suspected to be weakness found in their superior a martinet with a firm disciplinary hand.

He was one of the few men in high command who went through the South-African war of 1899-1902 without being involved in any of the "regrettable incidents" which brought discomfiture to some high officers.

Federal Employes Docked for Economy

All federal employes in Boston were docked two and a half days' pay yesterday in accordance with the government's recent economy program.

Two attachments for $15,000 each had been placed on the property of the Rev. Dr. Marshall in connection with actions brought by the Albania American School of Agriculture, of which he was an executive, and the Universalist Publishing Co., of which he was manager.

Another action charged him with failing to produce $25,579 at the Universalist convention.

INDUSTRY THAT DISRUPTS HOME

Upon our modern industry the Rev. Dr. Edward L. Curren has placed the burden of disrupting home life. In a radio message that reached the ears of men and women all over the country he analyzed the abuses of industrialism somewhat as follows:

"Before the existence of the factory the home was the center of industry as well as love. Describing those early days, it is said: 'In fruitful valley dwelling, they labored, loved from their store of which each was queen and flowed that tranquil domestic life of their families.

"To the crime of disrupting the human family lovers of humanity must forever denounce the abuses of the beginnings of modern industry. When mother and child were forced to work to supplement the scanty wages of the father, whom God had appointed the natural wage earner, the plan was fixed in the creation of the human family was marred and blackened almost beyond recognition."

While Father Curren recognized improvement over early conditions, and gave a place to mechanical conveniences, he deplored a lack of spirit of Christ among industrialists today. To such men of wealth, property and management who are working in sympathy and fellowship with their employes he paid the highest tribute.

RED CROSS ROLL CALL

The 1932 annual Roll Call of the American Red Cross will begin on Armistice Day, November 11, and will continue until Thanksgiving Day, November 24, according to an announcement just made at headquarters in this city.

Although this is the same period that the Red Cross has used for its Roll Call for 12 years, it was stated that the announcement was being made early in the belief that it might be of interest to other organizations which plan to hold campaigns this autumn and thus avoid confusion.

Chairman Hurley, Jewish Delegation

Upon several occasions representatives of the Jewish race have come to the Boston School Committee asking that a Yiddish speaking attendance officer be appointed in the Roxbury district. At a recent school committee meeting there were delegates from the Central Labor Union. The chairman of the committee and the members have taken the suggestion under advisement.

Rabbi Levi

Rumor that Rabbi Harry Levi of Temple Israel was to spend the summer abroad was shown to have no foundation in fact. The Rabbi will spend his vacation, down on the Cape and up in Maine. In his absence Rabbi Beril Cohon will conduct all services and occupy the Temple Israel pulpit.

On Common

The Rev. Stephen S. Ayres, of the Baptist Church, Malden, will have charge of the open air services on Boston Common tomorrow under the direction of the Greater Boston Federation of Churches. An unusually strong program is promised.

4 LINERS DUE HERE SUNDAY

Four liners are scheduled to call here tomorrow to embark or leave passengers.

The Milwaukee of the Hamburg-American Line, New York for Galway, Cherbourg and Hamburg, will proceed from Commonwealth Pier South Boston, carrying 300 local passengers.

The White Star liner Adriatic, New York for Cobh and Liverpool, proceeds from Commonwealth Pier, and the Cunarder Scythia, from Liverpool and Cobh radios her probable time of docking as 1 p. m.

Another arrival will be the American Farmer of the American Merchant Line, from London.

Liberal Women Assemble at Shoals

General Alliance Week for Unitarian women at the Isles of Shoals, New Hampshire, will be held from July 16 to 23.

The minister for the week will be Rev. William L. Sullivan, D. D., Germantown, Pa., and the lecturer for the week, Rev. George R. Dodson, D. D., St. Louis, Mo. The general subject of Dr. Dodson's lectures will be: "The Frontiers of Science, of Religious Thought, and of Social Life—What Life Might Be—May Be."

During the week there will be conference hours for the discussion of the problems and projects of the central committees on religious education, social service, programs, and appeals. Friday morning Mrs. Thomas G. Rees, president of the General Alliance, will be the speaker, and will conduct a conference for Alliance presidents.

There will be illustrated lectures by Mrs. Harold M. Vanderbilt on "Historic Chartreux and Monasteries of Switzerland," and by Professor Leon Campbell of Harvard Observatory on "The New England Eclipse of 1932." Rev. Charles R. Joy, administrative vice-president of the American Unitarian Association, will be the speaker at the annual banquet Friday evening.

Well-Known Men on Boston Common

Denominations mix freely on Boston Common every Sunday afternoon at the tree devoted to services under the Greater Boston Federation of Churches, near the Charles Street gate. Creeds that in years past would have clashed critically now are not forth in such a way as to harmonize and come before gathering crowds with a degree of common understanding. Tomorrow afternoon, for instance there are several Baptists and two Episcopalians. The Rev. Stephen Ayers of the Baptist Church in Malden presides, assisted by the Rev. Frank M. Holt of Melrose, Baptist, the Rev. J. C. Kolb, Episcopalian of Mattapan, and the Rev. R. Kendrick, Episcopal of North Andover. Services begin at 2:45. The Rev. George Warren Paine, executive secretary of the Federation will sail for Europe with Mrs. Paine for a tour of several Scandinavian countries.

Crew of Sailboat Rescued by Liner

New York, July 16 (US)—Coast guard officials stated last night that the liner President Monroe had picked up the crew of the little sailboat Darling which was burned off Cape May early today. The Darling was registered under the name of John Darling of Mays Landing, N. J.

Twenty-Seven Races

The American International College of Springfield, Massachusetts, has just closed one of the best years in its unique history. The student enrollment has been larger than ever before, and the prospect is that even more will come next year. The students for the past year have included 27 different nationalities. Chester B. McGowan is the president, and largely responsible for a notable success.

RECTOR OF ST. LUKE OFFERS CUT, GETS AUTO

The regulation present day incident, when the parson is waited on by a retrenchment committee to tell him he must take a cut, received a unique reversal in Chelsea.

When the Rev. James Edward Hand, rector of St. Luke's Church, rose in meeting one Sunday and offered to take a ten per cent cut, there were nods and the exchange of glances. Finally a prominent parishioner got up and objected to a cut. "If think our rector should have a raise," he said with emphasis. Another followed with hearty enthusiasm. "As our rector's work is even heavier in these times of distress than at other times I think we should give him a better car for visitation." Others at the meeting were ready to talk the matter over by themselves.

One morning when Rector Hand opened his front door there stood before him a brand new car with "Rev. James Edward Hand" painted on it in neat letters.

Rector Hand is chaplain of the Marine Hospital and of the Naval Hospital and of several others in the Chelsea district. He finds his new car does far better than his old worn-out vehicle which he turned in.

He hopes other clergymen will be as fortunate with their cuts.

MINISTER AND HORSES

A clergyman in a small town in Maine has a tale to balance the Chelsea rector's story. He says he was visited by several of the wealthy men who gave support to his church. One of these men was a horse fancier and a racing man with plenty of money.

"Can you take a cut?" asked the track gentleman.

"I don't see how," answered the clergyman. "You must," replied the owner of many horses, rather crossly. "Then if I must there is no argument," said the minister. "Have you given your stables and horsemen any cuts?"

"Certainly not," came the sleek-trap retort. "My horses must win in the race, and I cannot have depressed men taking care of them." And the interview ended.

FOUR DAYS' PAY

When Deacon X came over to the next town to attend church he was gratified to hear the minister say he would get along on a salary that represented four days' pay each week as his congregation, largely mill hands, were having but a four day week. Deacon X went back to his home parish and called directly on his own minister to whom he repeated the incident several times, very pointedly.

"Your neighbor is taking a four day week salary."

"And I suppose you would like me t> do the same?" asked the minister. "Well, let me tell you deacon, I have never got more than a four day week salary."

Lynchings Continue in the United States

The Federal Council of Churches Information Service publishes the following:

"Within the last seven months seven persons in the United States, accused of crime, have been taken from the protection of the law and summarily put to death. Five Negroes and two white men have been executed by irresponsible mobs without due process of law. The seven cases are as follows: Matthews Williams, Negro, December 4, 1931 Salisbury, Md., hanged and body burned. Pat Johnson, Negro, February, 1932, Brooksville, Fla., shot. Dave Tillus, Negro, April 1, 1932, Crockett, Texas, hanged. Richard Read, white, April 8, 1932, St. Francis, Kansas, hanged. Walter Merrick, white, May 19, 1932, Princeton, Ky., hanged. Luke Murray, Negro, June 7, 1932, South Point, Ohio, drowned. Henry Wood, Negro, June 7, 1932, Jasper, Fla., shot, body burned."

The Present Belongs to Youth . . . What Is He Doing With It?

"By Bread Alone" Man Shall Not Live

Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy in her book on science and health stressed the belief that the Scriptures would have men live by that which is spiritual and minimize the place bread shall take in man's existence. She wrote: "The Scriptures say, 'Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God,' showing that Truth is the actual life of man; but mankind objects to making this teaching practical."

"Life" is the subject of the lesson-sermon which will be read in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, July 17.

The Golden Text is: "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?" (Psalms 27:1).

Among the citations which comprise the lesson-sermon is the following from the Bible: "My son, attend to my words; incline thine ear unto my sayings. Let them not depart from thine eyes; keep them in the midst of thine heart. For they are life unto those that find them, and health to all their flesh. Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life." (Proverbs 4:20-23).

Mayor Curley Asked Protect Relief Funds

The Boston Council of Social Agencies has sent a letter to Mayor James M. Curley asking him to avoid if humanly possible any reduction in the amount now given in personal relief to suffering families and individuals.

The council committee among other things says:

"While we concede as every good citizen must, the obligation upon those responsible to show savings in municipal costs wherever possible to do so, we must, nevertheless, emphatically express our opinion, which we believe to be shared generally by those engaged in social work throughout the city, that savings in this department must not be made at the expense of those honestly receiving aid."

Clergy Write Hoover to Commend Him

Recently the highest officials of nearly a score of national church bodies joined in a message to President Hoover, expressing "most hearty approval" of his "courageous proposal" for the reduction of armaments. The church leaders described the proposal as "highly prophetic" and expressed the judgment that the President's "constructive leadership" will be enthusiastically welcomed by members of all the churches.

The statement was sent out from the office of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America and was made public by Bishop Francis J. McConnell, president of the council.

Weil's Suggestion Called Impractical

A. Leo Weil, a Pittsburgh attorney, recently, while in Cincinnati, made a suggestion before the semi-annual meeting of the executive board of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, for ending the present depression. He proposed that wealth in this country representing approximately an income of $71,000,000,000 assess itself five per cent.

"This would yield," says Weil, "if every interest paid its share, nearly $16,500,000,000 on an aggregate wealth of $329,700,000,000."

The plan was looked upon as visionary and impractical as wealth could not be induced to make such a sacrifice.

Religious Head Sees a Two-Faced Hoover

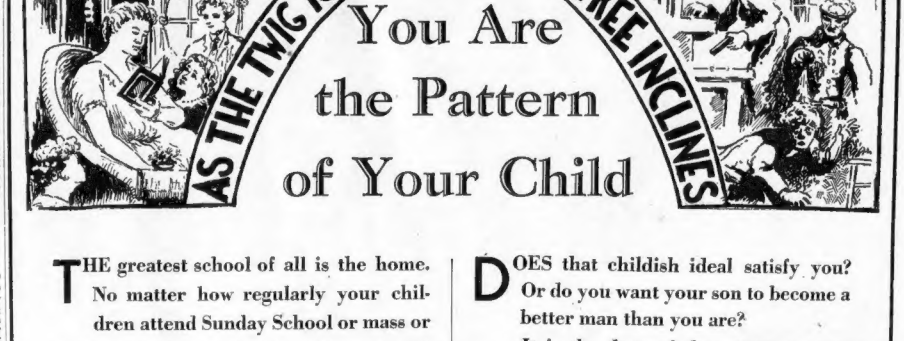
Dr. William T. Gilroy of The Congregationalist in commenting on Hoover's stand on the Republican "dry plank" writes:

"The plank adopted at Chicago, as Alfred E. Smith has not been slow to point out, differs little from that upon which he (Smith) was defeated. It looks as if President Hoover is standing upon discredited and rotten timber. At any rate, his position of four years ago was not that of facing both ways."

Mustn't Lose 'Morals' With Unemployment

Mrs. Eva Whiting White, head of the Peabody Settlement House, sees danger from enforced idleness, and quoting from opinions expressed at the National Conference of Settlement Workers says: "Worried or harried adults do not give to children that sense of security that they should have. Many of the speakers asked the question as to our youth trained to work and now having nothing to do—what effect will this period have upon their abilities and attitudes unless they are drawn into a circle of influences that will relieve that monotony and stimulate a sense of their power to grapple with the future?"

Settlements are therefore organizing Boston recreationally to supplement what has already been done. The Y. M. C. A. is sending volunteers to many playgrounds and to many of Boston's street corners to aid in forming athletic teams, etc.



THE greatest school of all is the home. No matter how regularly your children attend Sunday School or mass or services at the temple, they will not profit to the fullest without the background of good training at home.

To inculcate good morals, character, ethical standards, is the duty of the parent, not the teacher.

You are the pattern by which your child unconsciously moulds his conduct. Every act of your life is watched. To be "like daddy when I grow up" is every child's desire.

DOES that childish ideal satisfy you? Or do you want your son to become a better man than you are?

It is the duty of the parent to conduct himself in the home and out of it so that he may justify his child's admiration and imitation.

Can you honestly and convincingly send your children to Sunday services while you remain away?

Live with your children. Play with them. And in your everyday life try to set them the example of good humor, kindliness, unselfishness, obedience to the standards of ethical conduct.

This educational endeavor is made possible by the following public spirited citizens who are striving to make our community a finer and a better place in which to live.

Girl About Town

—By ALYCE SIEMENS—

Gypping About Boston!

Everything happens in this town—even the little gentle gypping that you'll run into now and then! . . . When you hear about so much of that business in Gotham it may surprise you to hear about this little gyp gem . . . Which happened here at one of our ultra-ultra clubs . . . Early in February last, to be exact . . . to a certain up-State night club habitue, whose secret passion is taking a night club over after hours—for his own private amusement . . . So that he may twang the steel guitar, rub-a-dub on the drums or croon through the megaphone . . . This chap decided one early a. m. to keep three of his favorite music boys overtime . . . Which announcement was a signal of much rejoicing, with the boys, a couple of waiters and the baritoning master of ceremonies sure of an extra ten-spot each for their efforts . . . Could they cajole and agreesable be for that extra fee! . . . The straggler customers were cleared out and the watchman, who was ever there at that time anyhow, stuck around, too! . . . The kitchen help left, since the refreshments consisted of one club sandwich for the chap and a few set-ups of ginger ale and ice . . . He was supplying his own merry-making beverage—and for the musicians and an owner of the spot and his wife, too . . . Just a quiet, orderly little bit of overtime funning, which lasted for two and a half hours . . . When the fun was all over and the chap from the sticks (who was a pretty regular dinner customer during the season by the way) asked for his check . . . With much gusto he was told it was okay and that they'd mail it to him . . . They did! . . . And he went for it—to the merry little tune of $197.70! . . . You don't believe that could happen here? . . . Neither did we until we saw the bill . . . With charges of $77.50 for food, $75 for "house charges" and the balance of $115.00 for the musicians, waiters, etc. . . . Surely a pretty penny to pay to roll a drum, tweak a guitar and nibble a sandwich—but because he had a yen to do same without the gapesters about to gape! . . . Don't nurse along those illusions that Hubbyn is any different than Manhattan for high tariffing when they can get away with it! . . . And some club owners whiling away their summer months still unable to understand that "just why it we don't do business?"

Wedding Bills Chime Out!

Yesterday a small group of society girls were re-telling of the hotel "do" which almost ruined a happy marriage of one of our most prominent matrons . . . A few years back, a New York society girl—as popular here as in her own town and Newport, had her marriage to a prominent beau at the estate of a relative . . . Her bridal party stayed with her on the estate . . . Her parents and the groom's parents, age of aunts and uncles stopped at one of the best hotels for three days . . . When her father-in-to-be, a wealthy foreigner, stopping there also bus for just the day between ceremony . . . He insisted at the hotel staff, knowing the family, chipped in and presented the bride-to-be with a lovely silver service . . . The wedding day the bride's mother settled the bill for her friends . . . And the bridegroom-to-be paid in full his bit too . . . Imagine his surprise when, just as he and his blushing bride were ready to dash for their honeymoon train, he was presented the bill for his in-laws' and relatives' sojourn at the hotel . . . It was twice the legitimate amount his mother-in-law had already paid—plenty padding, with the silver service well taken care of! . . . What could the poor bridegroom do but pay and pay? . . . He did with ranklings in his heart towards the bride's family . . . He thought it a strange American custom when her family was so wealthy as he was . . . He couldn't appreciate any of his wife's family making it so difficult for her and she who adored them and to her handsome husband . . . Not until they were preparing a world tour, three years later, and the receipted bill dropped out of his writing case did his wife find out about it . . . And that's a story of a few years back—before the so-called gypping and racketeering we have and see so much of was ever in vogue.

Minor Gyps:

Then there's the green marketman in the Back Bay district who never fails to put the wormy cherries in every paper sack when you decided to make a purchase because of those lovely, luscious cherries packed so wisely in their wooden boxes . . . Fiendishly almost he snitches your cherries from the day's lot—even when you're about to the peek-out! . . . And the mattress scouts who're buying up those old mattresses off the junk heaps . . . And using them with new furbishings—hoping to go to market with them . . . And the plugged up phone boxes in the Back Bay . . . Where you insert a nickle in a hurry and good luck . . . And nothing happens! . . . You're worn to a frazzle trying to signal the operator . . . Give up and dash to the next phone . . . If you stand by a bit you'll see the picksters making their way pulling off the wadding they've tucked up in the money slots . . . And then into their grimy hands you'll see dimes as many as three dollars in pitneys jingle out . . . Not forgetting that beauty at one of our better toilet goods counters who regularly hands over a dozen or more of those dark colored expensive perfume bottles to a "shopper" who dashes away with them . . . To have them refilled with this and that to be resold to you at such a price! . . . We're gyp-snooping occasionally and maybe our tid-bits from here and there will make you pause once in a while . . . Grasp it?

"LADY AND GENT"

North Shore Raises the Torch

By NICHOLAS YOUNG

Not to be outdone by pesky rivals on the South Shore, that region of the North Shore socially listed as Magnolia proposes to take its own part in New England's summer festivals. In this affair it becomes largely a case of New York to the rescue, with the most solemn arbiters of what is good and bad in the drama perched high on the judicial bench. These honest advocates of better plays for summer folk are men of manner and means. It has become a triumvirate in art, and lists as its sponsors Deems Taylor, Romney Brent and Vladimir Rosing. Conceived in New York, initial operations were quickly shifted to the stony shores of Cape Ann.

It is a matter of news that this trio of artists with a strict object in view should select the Oceanside Theater in Magnolia for its first experiment in making drama pay its own way. Which, you must concede, is both right and proper. In something like reverse action the Commonwealth Theater (the Deems Taylor group) has amplified the good old Subscription List by a plan of stock selling that insures buyers not only of a glimpse of the finished drama, but a right to make decision on its value. Not even the very liberal Theater Guild ever stretches this selling operations to that point. They did the picking and you did the buying.

There is a good deal to be said of the plans of the Commonwealth Theater. The first play, which opens on Monday, is "The Man In Possession," a more than flippant comedy. It is not new in these regions, but it does possess qualities of entertainment which are not usually discovered in the general run of desperately exploited plays that reach our local stage.

While the Commonwealth Theater, Inc., expects its friends and disciples to buy stock, it does not deny any North Shores casual the privilege of buying seats—or even reading reservations by telephone. The North Shore, from Marblehead to Rockport, has never failed to provide its own enthusiastic theater clientele. In better days Salem had its Empire Theater; in lesser moments it becomes no great hardship to drive an extra few miles to Magnolia and pay nightly tribute at Oceanside. Of course, the origin of all this is discovered in New York, where the Commonwealth Theater, Inc., planned its own ways and means and finally selected Magnolia as fertile soil for intensive pioneering.

The Commonwealth Theater plan of pay-and-share-in-the-profits is ambitious in these days of shrinking stock values. But man of acute theater sense sit in judgment on every production. They may go wrong; the picker of many a new play that tips Broadway on its ears is just the best guesser is a multitude.

Out-of-Town Drama

FILMLAND FRIVOLITIES ON PARADE

Stars Give Out Golden Glow

A bill of stars, embracing stage, screen and radio talent, three of headline dimension, is currently presented on the stage of the New Keith. First, there is Rosetta Duncan, of the famous Duncan sisters of "Topsy and Eva" renown, who has been "going it alone" since her flaxen-haired sister Vivian took to marriage and motherhood. Rosetta is heard in characteristic comedy songs, written for her by Blanche Merrill, and with her is Pat Casey, who presides at the piano.

Next, there's Grace Hayes, star of radio and musical comedy, and a prime favorite in Boston, who brings one of the outstanding acts of the season.

That good film comedian, star of 100 screen hits, Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, is the third feature attraction. The surrounding program includes the Roxy Theater Ensemble, comprised of 12 members of Roxy's famous gang; Herman Hyde and Miss Mons, in travesty called "A Bit Different"; the hokum comedy team of Cass, Mack and Owen in "On the Up and Up"; and presentations, "Porcelain Romance," told in songs and steps by Ganjou Brothers and Louise Gay.

Gayety Theater

Starting tomorrow at the Gayety, the current show will feature "No Greater Love," with Dickie Moore, Richard Bennett and Beryl Mercer, and "Roadhouse Murder," with Dorothy Jordan and Eric Linden. Five vaudeville acts are also on the bill.

Four Stars on the Bill at the Met

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

George Bancroft and Wynne Gibson make a swell film team in "Lady and Gent," featured on the Met screen. Through a rather unusual story they step along so niftily and successfully that one is inclined to think this rich partnership is a cinema event of the year. On stage, the Metropolitan again has Gene Dennis, that mystifying lass who answers queries of all kinds, shot at her from all parts of the house; and again Fabien Sevitzky and his orchestra triumph. It is a good program, and one can be thankful that the silver sheet holds its own in comparison with the footlight class.

"Lady and Gent" starts in quite a hackneyed way, but is soon leaping off at a tangent to a human interest theme that gathers momentum as onward it moves. Miss Gibson is a night club hostess and Bancroft a pugilist, is "her man." He loses the only fight brought into view, is a good deal of an old mug and much tied to the apron strings of the fiery lady of love. James Gleason, his manager, loses his life trying to steal money he needs for the folks back home who are ignorant of his calling. That plunges us into the real drama this movie unfolds.

To the small town then the camera swings, and from this point on the panorama is startlingly real and amazingly interesting. Thanks be, there is full play for the photographers, the lenses swing and they sweep, and the actors act. Bancroft once more proves his histrionic mettle; no longer is he the human hero; he is here something of a sap, but a fellow with a heart. One hacks back to Wallace Beery in "The Champ"; Bancroft is stellar.

He and Miss Gibson, tossed together by the casting director, are a natural team. They work together flawlessly, and have genuine laughter, as well as heart throbs now and then.

Most of the way, "Lady and Gent" is exceedingly good motion picture.

Miss Dennis amazes us yet once more, by her keen responses, often flavored with humor. She baffles analysis by us; and the audience takes to her as a duck to water. She is one of the best attractions the house has ever had.

Mr. Sevitsky's band merits all this applause it gets. The revue, "Clean Up," teems with talent, and is snappy and colorful.

Gene Dennis Schedule

Gene Dennis appears on stage at the Met on the following schedule today: p. m., 12:52, 3:45, 6:40, 9:33.

Thrills and Laughs Mingle in Joan Blondell's New Picture

"Miss Pinkerton," thanks to the Warners, forms another in the chain of successes that company has turned out to enliven the summer season. The latest is a mystery thriller, with finely sustained suspense and abundant laughs. It makes corking good entertainment at the Paramount and Uptown.

The Mary Roberts Rinehart story is neatly changed into cinema material, and the producers have looked out for every feature. Acting, directing and settings excel; the story moves rapidly, the goofy happenings are nicely relieved by real humor. True, the movie makes use of all the oldtime ingredients for such a work; one's suspicions are turned hither and yon, spooky things add to the excitement. And the laughs are genuine, due to the quality of the performers, topped by Joan Blondell and George Brent.

Joan has always been blessed with that magnetic substance that is summed up as "personality." Now, as she enters the realm of the stars, she seems suddenly to have grown up and she carries her new responsibilities with dignity and charm.

In "Miss Pinkerton" she portrays a hospital nurse who is fed up with the monotony of her work; then suddenly is thrust into the vortex of a baffling murder mystery. Through her quick wit and keen woman's instinct she succeeds in solving the mystery where trained detectives fail; and incidentally, manages to get herself loved and in love. The romance prospers despite the furious sequence of events in which it is nurtured.

Brent, as Inspector Patten, turns in a splendid characterization.

Fine Variety Is Footlight Fare, Strange Story on the Screen

Variety on stage at Loew's Orpheum this week is excellent. One finds color, ability, and plenty of snap in the program. On screen is the film made by Dr. Paul Washington's expedition to Australia, which has its climax in one of the strangest episodes ever shown on screen.

"The Unknown Captive," the picture, is far ahead of the usual adventure film. The suspense leading up to the discovery of the white woman lost among these primitive creatures, is well sustained.

The vaudeville this week offers a wide variety of excellent entertainment. The graceful and internationally famous dance team of Chaney and Fox are the week's topliners. These stars of the dance offer a distinctive cycle of jazz-classic routines, assisted in vocal interludes by Joe Griffin.

Another act of stellar proportions featured on the bill is that of Monica and Ann Skelley, sisters of the famous Hal Skelly, who are assisted by two husky some male partners in the presentation of a delightfully different song and dance offering.

The comedy offered on the bill is handled by the Three Rio Brothers, youthful hokum comedians, whose comedy is of the collegiate variety. Several other acts are offered, and include Belle Blanche, known as "The Songbird Impersonator," and the Zelda Brothers, in aerial antics.

'Unashamed,' at Loew's State, Finishes With Smash Climax

By HARRIS MORGAN

"Unashamed," with a sterling cast and excellence in production, holds the feature place on the Loew's State screen. It again reveals that magic art of Lewis Stone, one of the best of all Hollywood actors, and here making the silver sheet ringingly real. Some day, they'll do what they ought to do, and star him; at present he is content to make lesser roles outstandingly brilliant.

The photoplay is based on the theme of a recent headline murder case. Changes have been made, the artificer being the able Bayard Veiller, who deals with the foibles of modern youth, infatuation versus reality, and suspense in the nth degree. Veiller was the author of "The Trial of Mary Dugan" and "The Thirteenth Chair."

The new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture is remarkable not only for an outstanding characterization by Helen Twelvetrees, and excellent work by a splendid cast, but for the daring originality of the story.

The heroine is a millionaire's daughter, imbued with the modern youth's idea of "freedom." She is infatuated with a fortune hunter. When their marriage is forbidden the two court disgrace, trying to force consent. The mother, learning the truth, kills the lover and faces trial with sealed lips to protect the girl's reputation. The girl must choose—her reputation or her brother's life.

Out of this is woven a vigorous bit of dramatic writing, with suspense, mystery, comedy, heart interest.

Miss Twelvetrees runs the gamut of emotions from a thoughtless flapper to a woman who has tasted the bitter dregs of life. Robert Young is convincing as the brother, while fortune hunting lover is adeptly played by Monroe Owsley. Splendid character work is done by Jean Hersholt as the old German grocer, Lewis Stone and John Miljan battle as opposing attorneys in the trial scene. Robert Warwick plays the father and Gertrude Michael the brother's sweetheart.

This Congress Full of Pep

Film patrons will have a chance to view the complete, original German film success, "Der Kongress Tanzt," at the Fine Arts next week. The cast is made up of Germany's leading stage and screen personalities, headed by Lilian Harvey, Willi Fritsch, Conrad Veidt, Lil Dagover and Otto Wallburg.

Lilian Harvey may be recalled as a girl of five who went to Germany with her parents in 1914, only to be caught by the declaration of war, and the result was that she never returned to England to live. She was recently signed up for Hollywood films.

Carl Laemmle, Jr., Plans to Film Rider Haggard's Famous Thrill Novel

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Universal Service Motion Picture Editor
Copyright, 1932, by Universal Service, Inc.

LOS ANGELES, July 16—Speaking of novelties, what about Rider Haggard's "She?" There couldn't be anything more bizarre or unique than this classic which has been read by millions of people all over the world. That is just what Carl Laemmle, Jr., thinks and today he was settling off a few skyrockets because he was able to clear the title. He has been working for months to clear the screen rights for Universal.

Loulla O. Parsons

Who will play "She?" The weird heroine of the Haggard novel, is another question. So far Junior has no one in mind and neither has he chosen a director but it's going to be a spectacular novelty and one which will do credit to this old-time thriller.

Is there a market for romantic melodramas? You're right, there is and a big one. These "spellers" are sure-fire at the box office. Columbia is about to start the first of a series of six to be made on their lot. "Transcontinental Flier," the tale of a shell-shocked aviator who comes under the influence of a hypnotist, is number one. The idea was furnished by Lambert Hillyer and D. Ross Lederman is directing with Jo Gordon Kann writing the adaptation. Over at Columbia they want Ben Lyon for the part of the aviator and take it from me, Ben could do his stunts in the air without a double—and can he fly!

Added to Cast

Sometimes we feel Hollywood is too prone to go to New York for its talent. Yet, when an actor is one who has the ability of Henry Stephenson, there is no quibble or find fault. Mr. Stephenson was outstanding in "The Red-Headed Woman," and he will probably be equally good in "Riddle Me This," and "Bill of Divorcement." Samuel Goldwyn thinks well enough of him to sign him for the role of the Hon. John Tring, in the screen version of "Cynara." Mr. Stephenson created the role in the New York stage version, so he ought to know his lines. He is the only actor from the original stage company who will appear with Ronald Colman.

Divorce Looms

There isn't the remotest chance of Natalie and Buster Keaton becoming reconciled. Natalie will sue for divorce in Los Angeles, asking for the custody of the two boys and the family home in Jerry Geisler has not yet decided what grounds will be stated in the complaint, as Mrs. Keaton does not wish to have any unpleasant publicity over the divorce. Friends have hoped for a long time that things would right themselves in the Keaton home but yesterday Natalie said it was not of the question. She and Buster celebrated their fifth wedding anniversary in May and only until a year ago has there been any friction between them. Buster's contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer expires in October, but I believe, they are options and, so far, there has been no indication that it will not be renewed.

Hollywood Chatter

This love business has a way of interfering now and then with the plans laid down by the film companies. Joan Blondell is in love with George Barnes, ace cameraman, and she doesn't care who knows it. When Warner Brothers tried to prevail upon her to leave on a personal appearance tour with Bette Davis and Warren William, she balked. In fact, she objected so strenuously that she is right in Hollywood now. Bobbe Arnst is worrying and worrying over Johnny Weissmuller, who was to be home this week but who has postponed his return for three more weeks. Johnny has an ear infection caused by too much swimming and that has given his wife considerable anxiety. He has been away 16 weeks while she has stayed on in Hollywood keeping up his fan mail and looking after his business.

Another for Jean

Jean Harlow will have to stay up nights to make all the pictures Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer plans for her. "Congai" by Harry Hervey, is the latest one under consideration. I believe negotiations are now on but the sale is not yet completed. What with three others already chosen for the platinum blonde, Irving Thalberg probably won't lose any sleep even if he doesn't get "Congai." Four stories all set and ready are almost too many for any actress, even a young woman with Miss Harlow's popularity. Wonder if it's true that Universal is to remake "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" with Boris Karloff" We keep hearing it. Carl Laemmle, Jr., says nothing definite yet but it seems likely.

A Line or Two

Contract troubles all settled at Radio Irene Dunne is departing for Honolulu on Saturday. She is accompanied by her doctor husband, who has been visiting his wife for the past few days. The two greatest enthusiasts over the Olympic games are Harold Lloyd and Douglas Fairbanks. Harold and Doug departed for Palo Alto last night to take a look at some of the tryouts. Doug plans to not miss a day at the Stadium and Harold Lloyd put off his trip to Europe so that he could be here. Barbara Stanwyck has had to change her whole schedule of living. Fourteen out of the 25 scenes in "The Bitter Tea of General Yen" are made at night so she works from 7:30 in the evening until dawn. By the bye, 1000 Chinese are working in this picture. Everyone who has had a look at Richard Loo, Chinese actor who plays Captain Ll, in "The Bitter Tea of General Yen, declares that he has a screen future. Not since Sessue Hayakawa, Japanese actor, scored such a great success, have we had a young Oriental actor who has made a name for himself in American movies.

Snapshots of Hollywood

BUSTER COLLIER voted the best baseball player at the Hollywood Health Institute. SKEET GALLAGHER a close second. A study reports the Hollywood male galaxy is getting full of health by taking sun baths atop the roof of the Health Institute. MARJORIE and EDMUND GOULDING entertaining in honor of NORMA SHEARER Thursday night. SALLY EILERS, HOOT GIBSON, the RALPH FELLOWS and the EDDIE NUGENT and EDDIE HILLMAN dining together before the premiere, "The HOUSE ACROSS THE BAY" and PAUL BERN, guests of the GEORGE FITZMAURICES at "Strange Interlude." CHARLIE CONDON, pioneer in the film business, on the Columbia lot, writing. MINNA GOMBELL in Olympic colors at the Brown Derby. JUNE COLLYER, who is expecting the stork in a few months, lunching on the Roosevelt patio with her mother. BUCK JONES' 13-year-old daughter, who can ride like a streak.

Changes in Names Made

Executives of the RKO organization announce a change in the names of their two vaudeville theaters in Boston, as the present similarity in the two is somewhat confusing to theater-goers. The New RKO Keith's, formerly called the Memorial, is now known as RKO Keith's, located at 539 Washington st. This house is now playing seven vaudeville acts.

The present title of RKO Keith Boston, has been changed to simply RKO Boston, located at 614 Washington st., at the corner of Essex st.

Dropping of the "new" from the RKO Keith's, and dropping of the name "Keith" from the name RKO Boston, will no doubt make it easier for theater patrons to distinguish these RKO houses in Boston.

Louise Groody Is Headliner

The star of "No, No, Nannette," "Hit the Deck" and "The Church Mouse," Louise Groody, returns to vaudeville to headline the bill at the Publix Scollay next week. She comes in a new act called "A Musical Comedy Interlude" in which she displays her talent at singing, dancing and comedy.

Miss Groody's youth, good looks and ability, have endeared her to the theatergoers of Boston. For her partner in vaudeville antics, she has the same Eddie Allen who scored such a success with her in "Hit the Deck."

Another big feature of the show will be the 10 Von Grona Girls with Mlle. Leni Bouvier in a Modernistic Montmartre Dancing Revue. The producer, Von Grona, is the creator of the Von Grona "Spirit of Labor" dance.

Frank Ellis and company will have a comedy skit "Always." Bobby Barry and "Dick Lancaster will add more comedy and songs in "Doctor's Orders."

The Fox-Earne Revue will complete the bill with samples of songs and steps.

THE VOICE OF BROADWAY

By LOUIS SOBOL

Out of the Envelopes!

"In a recent column you wrote of the lawyer who didn't know his marriage law," writes L. Lyons, "and of the magistrate who didn't know either. They're both wrong. That couple you wrote of could have gone before any notary, or not even a notary—any person could have sufficed in New York state. A common law marriage is recognized—and 'deposing' before a notary that each takes the other till death, etc., or merely signing a statement to that effect, not before a notary, is sufficient under the law to make them man and wife, provided, of course, that they dwell together for a time after that. Under the N. Y. law, no writing is necessary, and certainly when there is documentary evidence of a marriage, especially when sworn to before a notary, that is more than enough to constitute a common-law marriage. Incidentally, here's a new angle, legally speaking—a sure cure an old practitioner taught me to rid this land of inveterate summons-dodgers. In N. Y. whenever it is evident that the defendant is evading service of summons, the attorney for the plaintiff presents affidavits to the court showing that fact. Then, the judge issues what is known as 'substituted service,' permitting service to be made by nailing it to the door. The trick is, that the statute does not designate what size nail is to be used—and so use one half a foot or a foot long. Its width and length would depend upon your preference and if the door happens to be a nice Colonial one, or of an expensive oak, the defendant never will duck another summons."

George Sylvester Viereck forwards me a symposium of reviews on a recent book of his in which the leading British papers toss themselves into an enthusiastic frenzy over its literary qualities in contrast to the American sheets, some of which carried no review at all, and others and those which did review the tome, gave it the needle. For example: The Times (London) says, "Staggering in the immensity of its scope and in the courageous sweep of its imaginative plan, etc., etc." The Times (New York): "There could be no point in discussing this concocted with seriously." Mr. Viereck is peeved and writes, "I wonder if the fault lies with the critics or with me? Can it be that the literary critics are still in the trenches or that they lack the discernment of their confreres in London?" . . . "Why don't you take a trip to the wholesale grocery district in Franklin st.?" asks L. F. Moore. "Walk through North Moore st. to the end and see the children of the poor loading 10-ton trucks for half a dollar. Then stroll down Greenwich st. to Franklin and see the wide open cafes with the executives drinking old-fashioneds at 75 cents per—the doors are wide open with the bartenders in white coats in full fashion." . . . "On Broadway and 53d st., on the southwest corner," informs Wallace Smith, "there is a haberdashery shop which announces on signs in its windows that it will accept at Strange Interlude." CHARLIE CONDON, pioneer in the film business, on the Columbia lot, writing. MINNA GOMBELL in Olympic colors at the Brown Derby. JUNE COLLYER, who is expecting the stork in a few months, lunching on the Roosevelt patio with her mother. BUCK JONES' 13-year-old daughter, who can ride like a streak.

"As fellow newspapermen and in justice to myself, I request you print correction in item referring to me," writes Percy Winner. "Mrs. Winner's legal proceeding against me is not in any sense amicable and I shall pr-bably contest it."

From Gertrude L. Levick writes: "At Le Dome, the Montparnasse coffee house with the sidewalk cafes, populated by artists and writers, and visiting literati from New York and points West (Konrad Bercovici and there last night) sip their cafe creme (the "creme" being not milk) at one and a half francs (six cents) a glass, and watch the passing parade. Sometimes, they nibble roasted peanuts (which is quite the vogue) and work up a thirst for beer which comes in small glasses, selling at six cents—and in big ones for eight cents, unless one feels flush and splurges with Munich dunkel at eight cents and 12 cents respectively. The real 'Bohemian' by drinking cocktails at 20 to 40 cents." . . . "I don't get to the big cafes much," writes Dorothy Wiss, "but out here in Bridgeport here's their favorite story. One of the local cops found a horse and on his beat so he took out his book to make out his report and found he couldn't spell Lafayette so, no what did he do but drag the horse all the way over to State st."

. . . (Bridgeport's favorite story, did you say, George? Make it Philadelphia's and Hoboken's and Salt Lake City's too, keed—the man who originated that story and told it first was Abraham Lincoln.)

"Here is an opportunity for a columnist to make himself useful," writes a woman who asks that her name be withheld. "A girl of the 1918 Ziegfeld Follies lies at death's door in a small apartment in Brooklyn—dying of pneumonia. She was forced to quit the show business after a delightful year because of a chronic bronchial ailment contracted from the backstage draft. In her moments of consciousness now her thoughts go back to the days of trouping with Marilyn Miller, Lillian Lorraine, Will Rogers, W. C. Fields, Ann Pennington and scores of other lights of that glorious show. While she keenly felt her own disappointment at being forced to leave the scene of her former happiness in the fame and glory that came to three of her classmates—the late Martha Mansfield, Louise Huff and Wynne Gibson. Her friendships with famous people are among her cherished remembrances—even though she realizes the years and circumstances have perhaps erased all recollection of her from the minds of those she thinks of now. Married to a former newspaperman (who, incidentally, has been out of a job for many months), she devoted the last dozen years to rearing a son and moulding him to all the fine ideals she recognized and admired in others. Now she is about to leave him—there is little hope for her—unless by some miracle she gets the financial aid necessary to receive a special serum treatment which the doctor says is her only chance to live. I was just wondering if some of the hundreds who 'knew the girl when' wouldn't perhaps be curious enough to inquire of you as to her identity if you published this letter—and perhaps come to her aid. Obviously her embarrassment and humiliation would endanger her even more if her name were published, so I will write it on a separate piece of paper for your own information."

LEE, HIGGINSON CO. ENJOINED IN KREUGER CASE

New York, July 16 (AP)—Charges that Ivar Kreuger, Midas of matches, stole $50,000,000 in bonds before he put a bullet through his head, echoed today through the maze of his frenzied finances.

The Irving Trust Company, which made the charge, started action to safeguard payment of $1,500,000 in interest on the bonds and was said to plan suits to recover the securities for the bankrupt International Match Corporation, a Kreuger concern.

The trust company, which is trustee in bankruptcy for the match company, obtained a temporary injunction in federal court yesterday restraining Lee, Higginson & Co., the match king's American bankers; the Chase National Bank and five Swedish banking concerns from paying the interest to any but the Irving Trust.

The complaint said the bonds, issued by the German government in 1930, were bought by the International Match Corp., of which Kreuger was president. It was charged that Kreuger "did abstract, remove and take away" these bonds and deposited them to his own credit in a Swedish institution.

Lee, Higginson & Co. was named in yesterday's proceedings as Kreuger's American bankers, while the Chase National Bank was named as acting in a fiduciary capacity for the German government.

The bonds have been mentioned as one of several issues relived to Kreuger's efforts to establish match monopolies in Europe.

WEDDING A SURPRISE

LOUISE CORN

FREDERICK MOUGEY

A secret marriage united Louise Rider Corn, of Texas, with Frederick K. Mougey, of Brookline, whom she met while attending Wellesley College. The couple were married in Crosbyton, Texas, Tuesday, it was revealed today. Even Mougey's parents didn't know of the romance.

A DIPPING SPOT FOR YOUNG QUINCY

West Quincy boasts of a new swimming hole for children under 10. And are the children of that section happy? Look at them. The new swimming waters are to be known as the Curtin Baby Swimming Hole. Nobody over 10 can swim in these waters. The watering place was made possible by overflow from quarry just taken over by the city. The depth of water at all spots is under two feet. Take a peep at groups of children the cameraman caught during the hot hours. (Staff Photo.)

ANTI-DRY RIOTS RAISE FEAR OF BLOODSHED

Alexandria Bay, N. Y., July 16 (AP)—Fearing bloodshed, Alexandria Bay waited today for investigation of a situation that has caused injury to two federal prohibition agents and three residents of this village in the last few days.

Andrew McCampbell, federal prohibition administrator for New York State, was reported coming here under direct orders from Washington to discover the cause of hard feeling over enforcement.

Last Tuesday a mob surrounded a raided establishment, beat two prohibition agents and slit the tires in their automobiles.

Thursday night a man and a woman were struck and injured by an automobile as agents drove away from a raid, and Agent Burke Hoffenstein of Syracuse was arrested. A stone flung at the agents struck and injured a boy bicyclist.

C. J. Savage, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, yesterday wired Secretary of the Treasury Ogden L. Mills, Commissioner James W. Woodcock, head of the prohibition service; Senators Royal S. Copeland and Robert F. Wagner, and Representatives Bertrand H. Snell and Francis D. Culkin:

"Would request all possible efforts on your part to secure enforcement of nation's laws in manner suitable to dignity of the government and according to the constitution of the United States and the Bill of Rights.

"Serious situation resulting in possible death and bloodshed will result inside of 48 hours if something is not done."

MOUGEY WEDS TEXAS GIRL

The marriage of Frederick Kurth Mougey of 156 Dean rd., Brookline, Boston restaurateur, to Louise Rider Corn, Wellesley graduate, in Crosbyton, Tex., last Tuesday, was revealed today.

Mougey left last month to attend the Republican national convention in Chicago and afterwards to take a short vacation.

Last Monday his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William L. Birely of Brookline, received a long-distance telephone call from Crosbyton, in which they were informed by their son that he was to be married.

The news came as a greater surprise, the parents said, because they had no inkling a romance existed between Mougey and Miss Corn. The couple met at Swampscott in 1927 while the families of both were summering there.

Mrs. Mougey is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Corn of the Half Circle S. Ranch in Crosbyton.

Mougey has extensive interests in several Boston hotels and is widely known in club and social circles here. He is a member of the Boston Athletic Association, the Brae Burn Country Club, the Eastern Horse Club, the Corinthian Yacht Club and several lodges. He is also a World War veteran.

There was a report when Mougey left for the West last month that Gilda Gray, one-time stage favorite, was the object of his trip, but the star denied the rumor, stating she and Mougey were just old friends.

THIRD DEGREE DEATH PROBED

Mineola, N. Y., July 16 (AP)—Whether a "third degree" killed Hyman Stark, 30-year-old prisoner, who died at police headquarters after eight hours' questioning, was the subject of vigorous inquiry today.

Stark, who was accused of beating a detective's skull with a hammer to death in a robbery, died last night under mysterious circumstances. Police refused any details.

Inspector Frank E. McCahill said he was out of the city because of the youth's death until he received an autopsy report.

It was not learned whether Detective Joseph Hyzensky, the man whose mother was beaten, was questioned by the police about the youth. There were four bandits, all young.

At the hospital Mrs. Hyzensky identified Stark as the man who knocked her down.

"I don't worry," he asked me to quit the stage," she said. "He promised me love and $100 a week, I'm now in the act at the trial."

Why We Take the Cubs To Take That N. L. Flag With Second Best Team

McKechnie's Number 1 Builds Real Teams But We Like the Raj.

New York, July 16—The reason I think the Chicago Cubs will win the National League pennant this year is because they have—on paper—the second best team and the second best manager. That may sound as though the July sun had claimed me for its own, but it's simple enough when you get the blue prints which we always are glad to throw in with a paradoxical statement.

On paper the best team in the National League is the St. Louis Cardinals. It would also be the best team on dirt if the young men who compose it weren't suffering from pennant boredom.

So I do not think Sergeant Street's platoon will win again, although the other clubs had better not leave the first prize hanging out there before 'em too long. Situations such as the one now existing on Mr. John Heydler's wheel are an open invitation for a money team to pick up the money. The Cubs and Pirates had better not play Alphonse and Gaston over first place too long.

Which serves to explain why I am not picking my idea of the best team in the league. Now about the managers:

On paper (meaning right out of the records), the best manager in the National League is "Wilkinsburg Will" McKechnie of the Boston Braves. McKechnie can come nearer to producing a championship ball team from a package of congressional spinach seed than any other ivory dealer this side of paradise. He's proved it over and over. Look back through his record and you'll see that he's practically always up there, and that he practically never has a team that rates the position it occupies.

So it is this season. The Braves simply are not a pennant-winning combination, and, therefore, I feel reasonably safe in saying that they will win no pennant.

He Could Run My Team:

Now, when I say McKechnie is the best pilot on the wheel, I am not setting forth my personal opinion. If I owned a ball club I'd rather have Rogers Hornsby running it than McKechnie. He is younger and he has more fire and fight in his makeup. "Wilkinsburg Will" is just one of those sweet mysteries of life that you can't get away from because he invariably delivers.

You must put him up there. Hornsby comes next because he has done more with mediocre teams than Charley Street, of the Cardinals. Gabby is a great scout and a smarter baseball man than some credit him with being, but there is no denying that he's had tailor-made teams during his short and spectacular career as a major league manager.

The old Rajah's got a good, game team to work with and the chances are they will outstruggle the younger and less experienced Pirates if these two outfits come down to the wire neck and neck.

Even if that prediction comes true, however, George Gibson, who came back out of the era of the Gibson Girl to take charge of the Buccaneers this season, will have scored a notable triumph. Not until his boys were caught crawling over the fence into first place did anybody—least of all, apparently, the good people of the Steel City—realize that Pittsburgh was still in the league.

When the team went to California to train last winter, not one Pittsburgh paper bothered to send a baseball writer along with it. Gibson wrote his own training camp reports to the Pittsburgh press, and thus became the first manager-reporter of modern time.

The season was opened in a pastoral quiet at Forbes Field that had the players talking to the umpires just to keep from going crazy from the solitude. Not that talking to an umpire is calculated to preserve a man's sanity, but it's any old port in a storm.

Real Forgotten Men:

Thus until almost mid-June the Bucs were giving a grand impersonation of Governor Roosevelt's Forgotten Men, and probably not even the most rabid ball fan could have named the lineup and batting order without recourse to the newspapers.

And even now I still believe they are a year or so away from real championship class.

Thus, if the Pirates are all they have to beat—and it looks that way at this writing—I'll be gravely disappointed if Boss Hornsby and his boys fail to come through. It seems to be simply a matter of sticking in there and battling for every run of every game.

Kid McCoy Starts Long Hike Back From Prison Cell

San Quentin Prison, Cal., July 16 (INS)—Kid McCoy, the one-time famous prize fighter, now 59 and a convict, today packed his togs in the state penal road camp preparatory to his return trip here for "check out"—and then freedom.

McCoy, whose true name is Norman Selby, is scheduled to be released on parole next Wednesday. For several months he has been working at the road camp, located on high cliffs above the Pacific Ocean, anxious to return to the "world outside."

When he obtains his liberty, McCoy is through with California forever," he declared. Los Angeles, where he mingled with the movie stars, was the scene of a crime that sent him to prison under a 20-year sentence.

He was convicted for the slaying of Mrs. Theresa Mors, 34-year-old divorcee and his sweetheart.

"I'm going East," McCoy at the camp said. "Either to Detroit, where I've been offered a job as physical education director at an automobile plant, or 'up-state' in New York, where an old pal has asked me to help him run a restaurant."

McNeely to Play for Senator 'Graduates'

Sacramento, Cal., July 16 (INS)—Earl McNeely, only California member of the 1924 world's champion Washington Senators, was called back today by his old boss, Clark Griffith.

Griffith is bringing together his 1924 champions from far and near to meet the present Senators in a benefit game, August 14. McNeely, now a member of the Sacramento club, will fly to Washington for the exhibition.

N. E. Best Swimmers in Revere Meet

New England's leading swimmers will take part in the championship swimming meet, to be held in the Nautical Pool, Revere, Friday evenin, August 5.

There are five events for men on the program. Competition for women includes: New England A. A. U. senior 300 meters medley championship, 220 yards breaststroke handicap, 440 yards freestyle handicap and invitation diving.

BOERNER IS MOUND FIND FOR RED SOX

By JOE CASHMAN

For want of a uniform, it appears that the Senators lost a fair country pitcher in Larry Boerner, who now hangs his hat in a Red Sox locker.

The elongated law student from Washington made his first major league start in the second game of the White Sox series and a more brilliant debut isn't listed on our record books.

He didn't give a hit in the first five innings. He allowed only eight in 11 frames. He was quite wild, handing out nine walks, but he took care that none of his passes proved fatal.

That he was beaten, 4 to 2, was no fault of his. Errors by his mates were responsible for two White Sox runs and a little sharper fielding would have prevented a third enemy tally.

BOERNER HAS COURAGE

His effectiveness was plenty to write home about but what made him stand out as one of the classiest mound finds of this or any other season was his courage in the pinches.

The stoutest-hearted lad who ever invaded the main test couldn't be blamed for growing nervous in the tight spots of his maiden effort, yet the more perilous the situation, the better Long Larry was.

Put the young man's name in your hat. With his "guts," he's go-

SOCIETY'S NEWEST DARLING!

He came, he saw, he conquered. That was Jack Washburn yesterday, at the Ritz, where he was the guest of honor at a tea attended by the bluest of Back Bay's blue bloods. That's the Gentleman himself at the top, clamped in an unbreakable headlock engineered by none other than Katherine Cunningham Gray, society debutante. And is he in agony? Don't be silly. And (below) you see the Gentleman (again himself) crooking a mean finger with five of Boston's most beautiful and wealthiest sub debs. Sitting, l. to r., are Dorrance Chase, Polly Palfrey and Katherine Gray. And, standing, l. to r., are Caroline Babcock, Virginia Rice and Gentleman Jack Washburn. Jack's entree into society was a huge success. And the girls made a hit with Jack.

Braves and Buccs in Twin Bill

Pittsburgh, July 16 — The league-leading Pirates and third-place Boston Braves, with two victories each, conclude a six-game series in a doubleheader here this afternoon.

Both hope for a twin triumph, though neither expects better than an even split.

The Pirates can afford to lose a pair, but the Braves hardly can, already being 4½ games back of the top as a result of dropping two decisions in a row after winning a doubleheader on the opening day of the engagement.

Danvers Nine Plays Giants Tomorrow

The Strong Danvers Tannery team will furnish the opposition for the Boston Giants tomorrow afternoon at Lincoln Park, South End. Not since the Philadelphia Colored Giants played here has the Boston club been forced to fan such strong opposition. The Danvers club has vanquished the strongest teams in the North Shore and come to these parts seeking new laurels.

COAST STAR TO WIN MUST IMPROVE

By LAWSON ROBERTSON

Chief Coach American Olympics Team

(Copyright, 1925, King Features Synd., Inc.)

Palo Alto, Cal., July 16—The most magnificent effort during the first of the two-day Olympic finals here, was that made by Eddie Tolan, of Detroit, the great sprinter, who turned in 10.4 seconds to tie the existing world's record for 100 meters.

Tolan's race was one of the greatest ever run anywhere. He was off nose too well and had to come from behind in the last 30 yards to eaten the speedy Frank Wykoff. He ran on a track that had been harrowed some time before and thus was soft, and, in addition to all this, he raced against a stiff head wind.

Ben Eastman

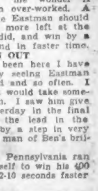
Tolan served notice during the week of practice that he was at his peak and I feel that the man who wins the final today must beat Eddie.

Ben Eastman's race today in the 400 meters makes me wonder if Ben hasn't been over-worked. A great runner like Eastman should have had a lot more left at the finish than he did, and win by a wider margin and in faster time.

EASTMAN RUN OUT

Since I have been here I have been amazed by seeing Eastman working so hard and so often. I have felt that it would take something out of him. I saw him give all he had yesterday in the final effort to take the lead in the stretch to win by a step in very slow time for a man of Ben's brilliant speed.

Bill Carr of Pennsylvania ran well within himself to win his 400 meter heat in 2 2-10 seconds faster than Eastman, and Bill is in great condition. Ben will have to keep close to those record times of his to catch Bill in the 400 meters finals.



Bill Carr

There were no real upsets in the opening contests. The men ran or heaved weights in keeping with anticipated form, and practically all the stars are in the finals today.

The great performances of some of the men make it certain that the finals will furnish the most spirited competition in athletic history of this country. We will have a great array of champions or record-smashers competing with each other and amazing exploits are certain.

Lee Sexton of the New York A. C. who has been improving tremendously as a shot putter through the last year, cracked the existing world's record by putting 52 feet 8 inches. This is the fellow I am sure will push the shot 53 or more feet either today or during the Olympics in Los Angeles.

I have rarely seen a more remarkable exhibition of running than was shown by Ralph Metcalfe, of Marquette, in the 100-meter heat. He was off to an atrocious start—absolutely last and so

THREE I. LOOP FOLDS UP

Decatur, Ill., July 16 (AP)—After operating since 1901, with only the war year as the sole interruption, the Three Eye League today had given up for the season.

The oldest Class B league in the country was forced to call it a season last night when it became known that the Quincy club could no longer compete with non-paying audiences.

Decatur dropped out Tuesday, and the Danville franchise, operated by the St. Louis Cardinals, was transferred to Springfield, Ill., which had been forced to the wall. The move was made in order to attempt to finish the season with four clubs, but Quincy failing to obtain help from a major league club, made the foldup certain by collapsing.

The Cardinals had just contracted to operate the Springfield franchise for three seasons, and probably will be instrumental in attempting to revive the circuit next year.

Charity Calls Gentleman Jack, Society to Tea

By JOE MOONEY

Gentleman Jack Washburn, who will give his 220-pound all against Henri DeGlane in the interest of The Boston Evening American Christmas Basket Fund and incidentally attempt to affix the world's heavyweight wrestling crown on his noble brow next Thursday night at Braves Field, is today the darling of Boston society.

The courage which once carried him through lions' dens and screen tests yesterday carried him across Boston Common into the not-so-common Ritz Carlton and thence into the hearts of Boston's most sterling silver spooners.

Within the sequestered haunts of the Longwood Cricket Club yesterday were four young tennis champions.

They were Miss Virginia Rice of Boston, the Massachusetts State tennis champion; Miss Dorrance Chase of Boston, Miss Caroline Babcock of Los Angeles and Miss Polly Palfrey of Brookline.

At Rollaway Rink, Revere, was challenger Jack Washburn, fresh from completing his day's training and wondering what to do while they flshed his five training partners out of the ocean into which Mr. Washburn had flung them.

At the Ritz Carlton was Mr. Jack Watson, wealthy and famous former Harvard varsity crew star, wondering who he should have in for tiffin.

TEA MADE COMPLETE

No tea, reasoned Mr. Watson, is fitting and proper without these three factors: Somebody famous, somebody beautiful and somebody to serve. He thereupon decided to call in Jack Washburn, the above mentioned tennis stars and a flock of waiters.

The haute monde arrived. Among those present were Miss Catherine Cunningham Gray of Beacon st., daughter of James Cunningham Gray, a commodore of the Eastern Yacht Club, whose name is known wherever yachtsmen gather; Robert F. Montgomery, Brookline banker, and his good looking but diffident son, Jack Montgomery.

Mr. Watson was surprised, but not alarmed to learn that the girls were dying to meet the famous Gentleman Jack.

In fact, one would gather that Mr. Washburn was the sole object, outside of tennis, of the girls' consideration.

A bitter debate, if I am not speaking out of turn, had sprung up whether Mr. Washburn right, fully owned the tag of "Gentleman."

If Mr. Watson was willing, they would come in to tea and see for themselves.

The girls had been reading the papers assiduously of late, and they stood a house divided over Mr. Washburn's claim to gentility.

It was real, it was a pose, it was true heart beating against adversity. It was a plain phony, and what have you.

They would see for themselves. Mr. Watson kindly forbearing.

So the three forces converged over the tea cups.

WASHBURN MAKES HIT

The girls, accompanied by their gallant swains, swept down on Mr. Watson's fold like the driving rain and quite as beautiful.

Mr. Washburn and coterie followed like thunder on the left.

Mr. Watson, showing beautiful recovery under the strain, bade everybody welcome. Ah, the life, the color.

The girls, it must be confessed, came in a little cold.

Faced with the awful prospect of Mr. Washburn's four foot expansion of blue coated chest, they were a little at odds what to say.

And then Washburn came through. No runner, sweeping to deathless fame across the tape in Olympic triumph, no hundredth home run by a Babe Ruth, no right cross by a Dempsey, smashing an opponent into somnolence, could ever quite approach Mr. Washburn at that moment.

"Be seated, ladies," he welcomed them. Then, thinking that might seem a trifle formal, "Er-have a chair, girls."

It was the instant that seemed eternity. Then triumph.

"Won't you kids sit down and have some cake?"

It clicked.

"Oh, Mr. Washburn—we've heard so much about you!" they chorused.

"Ah, that's because there's so

KIROUAC LEADS BLANEY 1 UP IN FIRST 18 HOLES

WALPOLE BOY STAGES FAST FINISH

By BILL GRIMES

Staging one of the most courageous comebacks in years, Eddie Kirouac, Walpole unknown, overcame the three-hole deficit during the inward nine this morning at the Kirnwood Country Club to be 1 up on Bill Blaney, Brae Burn, at the end of the first round in the finals of the 28th Massachusetts amateur championship.

Kirouac was 38—37 for a 75 which included three three-putt greens, while Blaney was 37—40 for a 77.

During the round, both Kirouac and Blaney had their lapses. Kirouac, through his failure on second shots lost the sixth, seventh, and eighth holes. Blaney weakened at the 15th, 16th and 17 holes with the result that he was trailing at the conclusion of the round by one hole.

Kirouac played by far the better golf. Blaney pushed no less than six shots but he made such wonderful recoveries that he won two of these holes, halved two and lost only two.

BLANEY PROVIDES FEATURE

The feature of the round was Blaney's iron to the sixth green, which he played through the trees, one of which he had hit with his drive and dropped into the rough.

Both got beautiful drives off the first tee. Kirouac chipped on about 12 feet to the right of the pin and dropped his putt for a 4. After Blaney had missed his putt for a 5.

Going up the second, Kirouac was just short of the green, but Blaney pushed his second down on the side of the hill.

and they halved the hole with fives.

After pushing his tee into the rough, Blaney was short of the third green in two, with Kirouac on the back edge. Blaney chipped on and got down 1 none putt for a half.

At the short fourth Kirouac was on nicely from the tee, but Blaney underclubbed and was short ,but he won the hole with a three as Kirouac took three putts.

Blaney's drive off the fifth tee was pushed badly and landed in back of the third green from where he made a wonderful recovery and was home with a three, to halve the hole in regulation four.

After getting a three and dropping into the rough at the sixth, Blaney made another Guilford recovery, smashing an iron through the trees to the green.

Kirouac was just short in two and his approach shot rolled 15 feet beyond the pin, coming back to a foot as he missed his putt.

At the seventh, Kirouac was again short but this time his approach was weak and he was half stymied by Blaney's approac putt. The Brae-Burn player winning the hole with a four to be two up.

Kirouac played too close to the left hand edge of the dog leg 8th fairway, hit a tree and his ball kicked back in the road.

At the short ninth Blaney's approach putt was dead to the cup, but Kirouac ran his in for a deuce and a win.

BOTH SHORT AT 10TH

At the 10th, they were both short in two and just on with their approaches. Kirouac's putt for a four went over the cup and he missed coming back to a five.

Blaney pushed his tee shot in the 11th into the righ and after Kirouac had pulled his second, Blaney was trapped. Kirouac played a beautiful niblick from the rough, and just missed holing out to win with a four.

Kirouac ran in a 20-foot putt with a desire to win the 12th, but he had had a bad break at the 12th where he missed a short putt after his ball had given Blaney a perfect line for a birdie.

Again at the 14th, Blaney pushed his drive while Kirouac was in with two beautiful shots. Although Blaney's chip shot ran 35 feet beyond the pin, he got his putt for a four and a half. Blaney missed a short putt at the 15th which cost him the hole.

With Kirouac well down the 16th fairway with his drive, Blaney hit the trees, put his second out of bounds, and did it in the rough at the pond, and was home in four. Kirouac smashed a beautiful brassie shot and got home with three putts for a win.

Kirouac ironed nicely to the 17th green, but Blaney was trapped and just got out in two, Kirouac winning with a three to be one up.

Kirouac hit a terrific drive off the 18th tee which was just short of the green. Blaney played a magnificent shot, just missing the pin from where he missed holing out for a birdie, and halved the hole.

Linnehan Tangles With Irate Mat Fan

A possible riot was averted at Lincoln Park when one police bullied an unscheduled wrestling bout between George Linnehan and a member of the audience who tried to crown Linnehan because of the grappler's roughness in a go with Mike Nazarian.

When the bout proceeded it resulted in a 20-minute draw.

Gentleman Jack Gave Fans Wild Action Mat Thrills

By "GENTLEMAN" JACK WASHBURN
(As Told to Jack Conway)

I MET Toots Mondt in Chicago. My only instructions to him were to get me as many matches as possible and against the best available opponents.

Then I went into training. Instead of spending all of my time wrestling, I devoted much effort and thought to boxing and bag punching. I also did a great deal of road work as I wished to develop my endurance.

I felt the public was tired of the old style wrestlers. The fans got bored as they watched the average run of heavyweights roll around the mat for two to three hours.

IT was my plan to shock the public, to give it the most intensified action it had ever witnessed on the mat. I would wrestle, punch, kick and do everything else I could get away with on the mat.

Away from the turmoil and confusion of actual competition I decided I would live as a gentleman should. No room in a lodging house with prunes for breakfast for "Gentleman" Jack Washburn. No dirty linen and spotty clothing.

Out in Hollywood I enjoyed a real taste of life. Why not some of the Hollywood atmosphere in wrestling?

WHEN I hit a city, I put up in the best hotel in the place. If the leading hotel had a flossy pent house, that's where you could find Jack Washburn.

While in Boston, I have always occupied a pent house at the Hotel Manger, while I have had a special gym on the roof.

I IMAGINE that a lot of fellows who deprived themselves of the good things of life and then put their money into the stock market regret they didn't take a page from my book of living.

Mondt hooked me through the Middle West. Everywhere I showed I gave the fans action.

Oldtime wrestlers were shocked and amused when I knocked them out with right-hand punches to the jaw and kicked them in the mid-section. They didn't know what it was all about until they came to in their dressing rooms.

Then at times I would disregard the rough-house stuff and win on straight wrestling. Mondt had taught me a great deal about the fine points of the game, and so I could win on straight wrestling when I decided to do so.

My chief aim, however, was to thrill the fans. So I gave them my brand of action.

Old box office records went by the board as I continued to bowl over the opposition. The public liked my brand of action.

Of course I ran into a few riots here and there. There was the night at Cleveland when I was wrestling George Calza, famous Italian heavyweight wrestler.

After I pinned Calza, the crowd started hopping from the gallery right into the ring. I started for my dressing room with the mob at my heels. There was only a handful of cops in the auditorium and it looked as if my remains would be shipped home in a box.

Before I reached the dressing room one of the club attendants pushed me into an elevator and ran me up one floor. The crowd rushed upstairs, and so it was necessary to drop me between floors in the elevator to protect me from the angry mob.

SOMEBODY thoughtfully put us in a riot call. The mob kicked the elevator in a mad effort to get at me. I would have torn the limb from limb.

The cops finally blew in, belted a few birds with their night sticks and rushed me to my hotel. A police guard stood outside of my room all night.

Jimmy Doyle, Cleveland sports writer, nicknamed me "Gentleman" Jack Washburn.

"Why the Gentleman," I asked Doyle.

"You're such a nice fellow," replied Doyle.

It has been "Gentleman" Jack Washburn ever since.

ing places and you'll hear plenty about him anon.

Larry is a product of the University of Western Maryland, where he played baseball and football. He played minor league ball around Virginia following his graduation and finally attracted the attention of the Cards.

His west South with the world's champions this past Spring and in his only game, blanked the A's for five innings. In the sixth frame he was hit on the head while at bat. His recovery was slow and he was finally sent home to Washington to rest up. Early last month he was ordered to report to one of the Cardinal farms. The order didn't appeal to him and he told Branch Rickey as much. Branch grew all hot and bothered and handed the youngster his release.

So our hero jumped over the back fence of his home into the Griffith Stadium, seeking a tryout with the Senators. Walter Johnson told him to put on a uniform. It happened, however, that every Washington uniform which would fit Larry's long, lean frame, which goes up 6 feet 4 inches into the air, was at the laundry. He was told to come back the next day. Instead he walked over to the Sox clubhouse, found a suit that covered him and became one of the McManus charges.

The Lynn Gas A. A. will conduct an amateur boxing tournament Monday evening at the John H. Curtin Field, Lynn.

Bill Dowling is in charge of the show. Fighting will be held in the 112, 147 and 160 pound classes with the latter for novices only.

Sonny, Lutze Meet in Semifinal of Title Mat Show

Gus Sonnenberg, former world's heavyweight wrestling champion, has been matched to battle Nick Lutze of Southern California in a 30-minute bout as the semifinal to the world's championship tussle between Henri DeGlane and "Gentleman" Jack Washburn at Braves Field on next Thursday night.

This is the most important semifinal ever billed for a wrestling carnival in Boston. It assures a complete sellout of the 60,000 seats much of me," answered Washburn. (The fire would be under control any minute now.)

TEA PROGRESSES

The girls were stopped for a minute, but champions being champions, they went on. A trifle grimly, but they went on.

"You know — I'm from Los Angeles, too," said Miss Babcock, with all the nonchalance of some one announcing the end of the world.

The next five minutes were devoted to reminiscences of the native beach. Mr. Washburn was at a loss to recall much about his home town, but he remembered the Los Angeles Zoo, which he mentioned loudly and frequently.

There was the stillness of twilight on the part of the rest of the assembled tea fanters, then the dawn.

Someone had the good grace to remember that Mr. Washburn had figured largely in the movies.

Be it said for Washburn, the bearer, none of the unorthodox mannerisms which so endear him to the mat fans were on exhibition at the tea. True, he gouged the hearts out of a dozen chocolate eclairs. True, indeed, he sunk flashing molars into flimy lattice sandwiches. Yet at all times he was the handmaiden of delicacy. In a word, he went all right.

And so it went. Washburn the impeccable, the toujours suave, the gentleman par excellence.

How did Mr. Washburn find Boston as a tourist town? Mr. Washburn found Boston, like Anon Ben Adhem, leading all the rest. He spoke long and lovingly of the crowds drawn to every sport.

They talked of tennis, of wrestling, of everything under the sun.

And then Gentleman Jack rose to leave. He had an engagement with Floyd Gibbons, and he explained that Gibbons was like the tide and ride, waiting for no man.

Exit Gentleman Jack, with bows.

Hubbub.

"My dear! Did you EVER see such a man?"

"NOW, isn't he the gentleman?"

"WHEN can we see him wrestle?"

There you are. The best in Boston society all in a flutter over "Gentleman Jack."

And just who are these young ladies?

They are above all, very good sports.

With thousands of others, they will go to Braves Field next Thursday night to see Gentleman Jack come to grips with Henri DeGlane. Although they've never seen a wrestling bout, they'll be at the ringside Thursday night. And they'll bring all their friends, too. They will be among Gentleman Jack's staunchest supporters. They sold so themselves. They like the big fellow.

Meeting a heavyweight wrestler was a novelty for them, but debutantes and wrestlers both can see alike on one point. A hungry and hungry kid, and what are you going to do about it?

N. Y. A. C. Favored to Win Club Honors

Palo Alto, July 16 (INS)—The New York Athletic Club was a strong favorite to capture the National A. A. U. track and field championship here today. The event is being held in conjunction with the final tryouts for the American Olympic team.

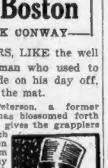
The Olympic Club of San Francisco and Los Angeles Athletic Club were expected to stage a close battle for second honors.

Mr. Boston

—By JACK CONWAY—

WRESTLERS, LIKE the well known motorman who used to take a car ride on his day off, keep close to the mat.

Big Boy Peterson, a former wrestler who has blossomed forth as a promoter, gives the grapplers recreation each Saturday when he takes them on the Dorothy Bradford which runs between Boston and Provincetown. Just so the big fellows won't forget their holds they perform on the deck of the ship for the edification of the cash customers.



Mr. Boston

I understand that members of Boston's artists' colony make a special study of muscles and physical development as the kings of the mat do their stuff. You can expect to see your favorite wrestler painted by a celebrated artist any day.

Big Boy Peterson tells me Jim Browning, Leo Numa, Hans Schroeder, Ole Anderson, Charley Hanson, Lee Wykoff and Rex Smith were on his guests' list for today.

YOU WILL soon see news despatches which will inform you that Jimmy Johnston of the New York Garden has offered Max Schmeling a September bout with Mickey Walker to be staged at the Garden Bowl in Long Island.

Johnston has already cabled Schmeling an offer for this match. Der Max, of course, would prefer to remain idle until next year in the hope of getting a direct shot at Jack Sharkey. Johnston, however, has informed Schmeling that he must take his chances in a heavyweight elimination tournament. Walker, Paul Schaaf, Carnera, Baer and Hamas are among the young men who will compete.

CROFFE SETS UP NEW MARK IN 400 METER

Cincinnati, July 16 (AP)—Clarence Crabbe of Los Angeles added to his train of honors today by breaking the Olympic record in the 400-meter free style race in qualifying for finals of the event in the Coney Island meet for selection of the United States Olympic.

Racing in a preliminary heat, he went the distance in 5:01 2-5, a fifth of a second lower than the mark set by Albert Zorilla of Argentina in the Olympic at Amsterdam four years ago.

Crabbe and five other swimmers were chosen on the basis of their times to compete in finals of the event this afternoon, when the three team members will be chosen for the 400-meter dash.

With the "Record Buster" to qualify were James R. Gilhula of the Detroit A. C.; Maiola Kalili of the Los Angeles A. C.; Herbert Barthels and Manuella Kalili, also of Los Angeles, and George Fissler, Crabbe's rival from the New York A. C.

far back that his cause seemed hopeless. But he came on with brilliant speed in the last 30 yards and almost caught Emmett Toppino, the winner.

A gladdening sight was the great comeback of F. Morgan Taylor, the veteran hurdler. He ran in the 400 meters—the most gruelling of races—where stamina and perfect condition are as essential as speed and hurdling prowess—and as won both his heat and the semifinal without being fully extended.

Our crack 110-meter hurdlers came through splendidly and when Percy Beard, George Saling, Jack Black, Jack Keller and the others meet in the finals a new record is likely to be hung up.

Earlier in the week I was of the opinion that no new records would be made on the track here because the breezes blow against the runners and the course is admitedly fast. But I must amend that belief now because of the calibre of our athletes which is so rich that they can crack marks no matter what the handicap.

A number of California field event men were given a big break when it was announced, after the completion of the first day's trials, that eight instead of five men in each event would qualify for the finals.

Boston Swimmer Olympic Qualifier

Cincinnati, July 16—Basil Francis of Boston, youthful 200 meters breaststroke ace, took third place in the event here to qualify for the Olympic games in a tryout today. Tom Blankenberg of Los Angeles won, with Ted Moles of New York in second place.

Golf Heart-Breakers Near Boston

No. 8 at Weston, G. C.

Although there are many fine holes at the Weston Golf Club, the Cape hole, which is No. 8, is by far the most interesting.

WOODED HILL
8TH HOLE
WESTON GOLF CLUB
"CAPE HOLE"
385 YARDS PAR 4

The Cape hole is par 4, measuring less than 400 yards. From an elevated tee, the drive is over a brook, considerable rough and a slight rise to a fairway which extends to the left. The green is guarded by a pond which curls around about two-thirds of the putting surface. On the right of the fairway, there is a hill but thick woods fringe the opposite side of the fairway.

Long drives carry over the hill and down the slope from where the better players pitch over the pond to the green, while the others approach to the neck of the green or play off the hill on the right, from which balls will kick down to the green.

Due to the fact that a second shot which is too firmly hit is liable to run across the green and into the pond beyond, approaches call for perfectly stroked shots, if players play over the water. On the other hand, the more cautious players do not always meet with success while attempting to carom shots off the hill. Now and again the ball does not kick as expected or stays up in the rough.

MADISON GIRL SCORES EASY VICTORY

Jones Beach, L. I., July 16 (INS)—Loafing all the way, and frequently turning her head to see how far behind she had left her rivals, Helene Madison, Seattle swimming queen, qualified easily here this morning in the 400-meter free-style contest as competition got under way in the second and final days of the final Olympic tryouts at Zach's Bay.

Despite her loafing tactics, Queen Helen turned in by far the fastest of the four winning heat times. She finished a lap ahead of Jenny Cramer, Hollywood, Cal. star, in 5:49-4-5, more than ten seconds faster than the 6:05 3-5 figures hung up by Lenore Knight, Homestead, Pa., in winning the second heat.

Norene Forbes, Los Angeles, with a winning time of 6:06 4-5, and Susan Robertson, of New York, who touched home in 6:08 4-5, captured the laurels in the other heats. The four heat victors and the ten next fastest finishers qualified for the semifinals.

Eleanor Holm, the pretty W. S. A. girl who holds all sorts of world's records and national and sectional championships, skimmed home an easy winner in the opening preliminary heat in the 100-meter backstroke race.

She took things easy on the final lap to coach her teammate, Lisa Lindstrom, into second place in 1:37 2-5, with Ruth Rittenmeyer, Wilkes Barre, Pa., placing tird.

A stirring duel in the next heat of the Dorsal event found Louise Robert, of Atlanta, Ga., gosing out Jean McSheehy, another W. S. A. favorite, in the fine time of 1:25 2-5 only a touch ahead of her New York rival. Miss McSheehy was clocked in 1:25 3-5.

The second semi-final was a snap for Helene Madison, despite the fact that she wandered all over her lane and repeatedly fouled the lane rope. She even took enough time out to wave her hand to a handsome lifeguard on the final lap, yet she was clocked in 5:49-4-5 equalling her time in the preliminaries.

Norene Forbes trailed Miss Madison by 25 yards in 6:06 3-5, with Alive Novack, Miami, nosing out Johanna Gorman, Homestead, Pa., for the place, in 6:10 2-5.

The Boston Evening American's contest editor is busy today scanning thousands of estimates entered by New England baseball fans for the third-week awards in the popular big innings game.

If anybody has been skillful enough to name the innings in which the big league teams scored the most runs daily during the week ending yesterday, he or she will be presented a check for $100.

And should anybody who entered the fourth-week competition, which closed last night, prove to have been correct when the figures are revealed next Saturday morning, that entrant will also earn $100.

Another round in this test of baseball knowledge and skill will start next Wednesday, when the entry blank for estimates of games played during the week beginning July 23 will be printed on these pages. Readers will have until midnight Friday to send in their figures.

Each entrant is limited to one estimate but winners are at liberty to compete for the awards every week.

If you haven't as yet contributed an estimate in this contest, study the box scores carefully between now and next Wednesday and be prepared to fill in the next entry blank.

And if any of you sent in estimates for the week beginning July 9 and ending yesterday which agree with the figures printed on these pages today, communicate at once with the Big Innings Editor at the Boston Evening American, 5 Winthrop sq., Boston. He will check your entry blank and if it proves correct, he will gladly pay you the $100 your skill has earned for you.

Diamond Dust

By JOE CASHMAN

When Jimmy Foxx isn't hitting home runs for the A's, Alphonse Simmons is. Foot-in-the-bucket Al banged out three circuit clouts against the Tigers to bring his season's total up to 24, which leaves him only two behind Babe Ruth, who trails Foxx by nine.

All these four-baggers aren't doing the defending champions much good. In spite of Simmons' three wallops, the Tigers walked off with the contest in 11 innings and as the Yankees won, the Macks are now 9½ games back of the roof.

Vernon "Lefty" Gomez scored his 15th victory of the season as the Yankees were pounding Jack Russell, erstwhile Red Sox, for 10 hits and winning, 8 to 5.

Earl Averill, who had been tied with Lou Gehrig for fourth place in the American League home run race, gained undisputed possession of the berth by pounding out homer No. 21 at Gomez' expense.

Six runs in the first inning enabled the Senators to whip the Browns, 8 to 7, and extend their winning streak to seven games.

It's getting so that as Jolley goes so go the Red Sox. When big Smead is hitting the Sox usually win. When he isn't, they are sunk. He failed to get the ball out of the infield in five times at bat against the White Sox in the second game and the Fenway flock went down in defeat despite the slugging of little Marvin Olson, who collected a single, double and triple and Dale Alexander, who made a single and double and drew two walks.

At that, Alex almost carried the Sox over the top without Big Smead's assistance. His double in the sixth traveled on a line to the picket fence in centerfield and had it been a few feet higher it would have cleared the barrier for a home run.

The Phillies nosed out the Reds, 4 to 3, in a bitter 13-inning struggle to go into a fourth-place tie with the world's champion Cardinals, who were socked on the chin for the third successive afternoon by the Giants.

New York Day by Day

Purely Personal Piffle

NEW YORK, July 16—Purely personal piffle: Rich men's sons working in overalls strike me as phoney. I can sit all evening watching a fancy lady in a cafe. Richey Craig, Jr., had the best fitting suit seen this year. The cut of the lapel is the important thing. I usually spell Francis, Frances.

Nothing amuses more than a French gendarme trying to stop a street fracas. Mark Twain interests more than any other figure in merican literature. A favorite feminine name is Lois. If business isn't on the upshoot when this appears, I'll never guess about it again.

I've a secret admiration for a rogue. But cannot stand a wilful liar. No person irritates so much as a woman with a few cocktails repeating herself. I cannot reconcile my acute sensitivity to animal suffering with a ravenous appetite for all meats. I've never known a native of Annapolis, Md.

The most attractive New York church, to me, is at the northwest corner of 5th avenue and 37th street. Spend an hour or so a week pleasantly studying the dictionary. And am generally first to arrive at a dinner party. I envy the confident assurance of S. Jay Kauffman in facing crowds.

Otto Kahn is the easiest of all celebrities to caricature on the stage. Every now and then I am tortured by fear I've swallowed a sliver of glass. The most enthusiastic Irishman I know is Patric' Shanley of California. I'm a sucker for every new sleeping lotion.

I've talked more to barbers than they ever talked to me, and I'd rather live in a theatrical boarding house than the grandest penthouse. Odor of bananas reminds me of hospitals and nothing nauseates me like cigarette ends in a half filled coffee cup. I think Schmeling was robbed. He won all the way.

Some day I'll start around the world on 24 hours notice. If I planned I would never go. I wouldn't visit a gypsy camp alone for anything. A cobra fascinates me. I like booths in restaurants where you can get away with a little plain and fancy gras- sopping. I sat next to a woman at a marathon dance who had occupied the same chair continuously for 52 hours. That's a hunk of sitting.

A regular correspondent is Billy Bryant, river showman. James Woods is my favorite hotel man. A lightning display on the Arizona desert from a train window was the most beautiful spectacle I ever beheld. The only fortune teller ever visited forecast death by drowning. No "next morning" description touches George Ade's "taste like a motorman's glove." When my wife grows silent I think it's something it never is. My every protest at income taxes, which experts pronounced unjust, have been overruled. So this isn't Russia?

I think a telephone number would make a good book or play title. Such as: "Chelsea 5643." Gandhi does not interest me so much as he used to. For no reason at all, Harry Staton, a good friend, and I begin abusing each other when we meet. We used to join in the same sort of venom with dear old Clare Briggs. And he could take it! An usher recently gave me a stern look for laughing so hilariously at a Mickey Mouse. My wife moved to a seat in another row.

* * *

The most perfect verbal silversmith, to my notion, is Christopher Morley. I'm always thrilled a bit b tinted, perfume scented envelopes in femmine hand. One of the brainiest men I know believes that everyone in the world will have to start all over again from scratch within th' next three years. Cheerful blighter! I have just ruined a comparatively new coat trying to eat ice cream on a stick in an automobile. Men working under acetylene lights invariably bring me to a full stop. I wave to about 250 crossing cops.

I have a crush on Anna May Wong. When my appetite fails, I can always eat a thin slice of cheese covered with jam. An can I gnaw the ends of spare-rib bones! I have to snake my Boston to wake him, coming home late. Swell watch dog!

* * *

The celebrity who looked the least like I had pictured him was Joseph Urban. A stranger once stepped up to me in a hotel in Reno and said: "You better not be here in the morning." I was leaving town that evening anyway. I never thought Ethel or John Barrymore could act. But Lionel, O, boy! O, boy!

REFORMS URGED IN PHILIPPINES

Washington, July 16 (INS)—Drastic reforms in the Philippine government were demanded by Governor-General Theodore Roosevelt in his annual message to the Legislature, made public here today.

Roosevelt revealed a continuously shrinking income for the government, and a mounting expenditure. He called for a balaced budget, economies in government, including practically a complete reorganization of many departments, equalization of present taxes and the levying of new rates, encouragement of new industries in the islands and assistance to agriculture.

He made no mention of independence for the island and devoted only four lines to encouragement of foreign capital, a subject treated at length in the messages of former governors-general during the last 15 years.

He recommended increasing the island's production of coffee, fruits, meat and eggs, all of which are imported in large quantities.

Zoo Keeper Gored by Blue Gnu Dies

Detroit, July 16 (AP)—Gus Mott, 58, a keeper at the Detroit Zoological Park, gored and trampled by a blue gnu yesterday died at St. Joseph's Mercy Hospital in Pontiac today.

The gnu, a male, is regarded as the most vicious animal in the park. It has killed one of its mates and two calves.

Schooner Is Relocated

The mackerel fishing schooner Colleen, with Capt. Frank R. Neal and a crew of five men, was floated at high tide last night, after she had been aground 24 hours on Brewster Spit, near the Narrows Light.

SKYSCRAPER -:- By Faith Baldwin

DWIGHT replied coolly, smiling at her, "It was pleasant of you to come," and turned to Sarah.

Lynn, a little taken aback, watched them. Incalculable man! The moment he was your friend dependable; you had only to reach out your hand for comfort. Nice, that feeling. The next second he was less than your friend, more than your friend—caressing eyes and disturbing voice. That friendship you a little but was pleasurable. And then again, as now, he was a hundred miles removed from friendship an acquaintance merely courteous, a little bored.

Not that it mattered much.

He had said nothing to indicate when they would meet again. Lynn went in to work a little hurt, more than a little puzzled.

But Dwight lingered in the corridor, detaining Sarah. "Will you lunch with me tomorrow?"

"Why?"

"You know why. We'll talk of —cabbages and kings."

"Well," asked Tom, appearing at Lynn's elbow toward luncheon time, "did you have a thrilling week-end—with Sarah?"

He was ugly. He had seen the car draw up, had seen the people in it.

Lynn replied defiantly, "Very. And you needn't take that attitude. I was with Sarah and you know it!"

"Sarah and who else?"

TOM DEPARTED

Lynn sat at Mr Dwight's country place.".

"Very jolly," admitted Tom, and dropped without further word.

She had half expected it of course. But—oh, everything was spoiled today. She slammed her desk drawer shut.

"Blue Monday?" asked the blond Miss Marple understandingly.

"Well, I feel that way myself. Hey, I haven't got over Saturday night yet. Was that a party!"

Lynn rose. She didn't want to eat alone. She didn't want to be alone. Mara was no longer available. Mara, home with Bill, planning to go West. "Not that I want to go, Lynn, but what else can I do? S says—he says he's sorry."

Could people really be "sorry" and begin all over again with the memory of things they had said between them, terrible things terrible memories?

Jennie? Perhaps Jennie would be free. Suddenly Lynn wanted Jennie and her astonishing acceptance of things as they are; her slangy, salutary cynicism which was not cynicism at all but a hard, pound ego. She would go upstairs and look for Jennie.

ASKED FOR JENNIE

In the express elevator she rose swift as a bird. She had been once or twice to Madame Fanchon's with urgent messages for Fanchon a "brat" novel. Now she went into the gray, ivory-paneled room, empty at this hour sacred to luncheon Fanchon herself came out and frowned at her a moment, puzzled.

"If I might see Jennie—" asked Lynn, smiling.

"Oh, Jennie's little friend. But certainly!" She stepped to the curtains at the door of the models' room, thrust her dark birdlike head between them, spoke; and returned. "It is nearly autumn," she told Lynn; "we've been very busy."

Jennie came into the room. She looked, Lynn thought, somewhat taken aback.

"Allo, keed," she greeted. "What's wrong?"

"Nothing. Jennie, have you had lunch?"

"Not yet."

"Come downstairs and eat with me. I want to talk to you."

"Oke," agreed Jennie.

Later, as they made their way toward the cafeteria, Jennie touched Lynn's arm.

"Not there. Let's go to the Gavarin," she suggested. "It is on me this time, and I've graduated."

"Jennie, did you get a raise—"

"Maybe."

JENNIE LEANED BACK

They went into the Gavarin and ordered. Jennie leaned back in her chair.

"What's under your hair, lunch? Come on, spill it. Momma's listening."

Lynn found herself talking furiously. Her quarrel with Tom—she did not mention the cause. "We just disagreed about something." the week-end. Such fun, Jennie, such a perfectly grand place;" Dwight's subtly changed attitude; Tom's exhibition "barging into the room and calling me down!"

Jennie commented slowly, "It looks like your girl friend to me."

"Girl friend?"

"Sarah and Stately. Sure she hasn't been putting a bug in Dwight's ear on your account? Look here, was he all over the place about you, down there?"

"Of course not." But Lynn hesitated, colored. There had been, after all, an arm about her, a voice: "Sweet person."

"Hum!" said Jennie. "Don't get mixed up with him, that's all I have to offer. You steer clear, you'll make it up with Tom. Don't feel yourself falling in another direction, do you?" Her words were light, but her eyes were anxious.

"Jennie, no, not in a million years!"

"Make it two million. The first million pieces go quickly," murmured Jennie. "Watch the traffic lights, Lynn; you aren't the type to cross against them."

"What do you mean, the type? Who is?" asked Lynn.

"I am," said Jennie, and turned her eyes away.

LYNN STARED

"Look here," said Jennie, "I've been away for the week-end, too."

"You have?" Lynn took it blindly enough. "Jennie, where?"

"Jennie!"

Pope Asks Dougherty About Negro Needs

Vatican City, July 16 (AP)— Cardinal Dougherty of Philadelphia, Pa., spent 40 minutes with Pope Pius in private audience today, resuming discussion of economic problems of the church about which they talked last week when the cardinal reached here from the Eucharistic congress at Dublin.

The Pontiff mentioned particularly the American Negro, in whose spiritual needs he is deeply interested.

POLICE AID IN WELFARE PROBE

By RUTH MUGGLEBEE

"His father had been dead for three years, but this man received aid for four months on his welfare card from the city."

PRISONERS CHECKED

With the realization that welfare receivers are squandering welfare money for purposes other than intended or receiving aid to which they are not entitled, welfare officials have asked cooperation of the police department.

Three months ago, on suggestion of Police Michael Crowley issued a general order requesting captains to report directly to him of all persons arrested who were receiving aid from the public welfare department.

The order is still in force.

But only within the last several weeks has the number of such cases warranted a more exhaustive investigation of the story behind the scenes.

Police are making every effort to assist the welfare department in weeding out unworthy cases.

PROBES ORDERED

Three startling police blotter reports reached Special Officer Ernest F. Fanjoy. They were marked for special investigation by Secretary of the Board of Overseers of the Poor Walter V. McCarthy, with margin notes to go the limit.

I quote verbatim the records sent to the superintendent of police and, in turn, mailed to the welfare department for action.

This information was gathered by William W. Livingston, captain of Division 5.

"Information has been received at this station that a man named ——— of Shawmut ave., Boston, is getting public welfare and goes about on a crutch. He is supposed to have considerable cash concealed in the leg of his trousers. I respectfully request that this matter be called to the attention of the department of public welfare."

It won't be long before this man will be called into conference with Officer Fanjoy.

AID FOR DEAD MAN

His letter to the superintendent was:

"———, of North Russell st., was arrested July 12, 1932, by Patrolmen Stapleton and O'Connell for using a portion of the public streets for the sale of merchandise without a permit. He had a welfare card on him in the name of ——— North Russell st., who, the prisoner stated, was his father, who has been dead for three years and that he had been receiving aid from the city of Boston on this card for four months."

WIFE GIVES TIP

A frightened wife, despairing of her life, brought William Greenwood, 50, of Water st., Hyde Park, to the notice of the public welfare department.

Fifteen minutes after midnight of July 12 police of Division 18, of which Edward J. Walsh was the commanding officer at the time, received a complaint from Mrs. Greenwood.

The police blotter revealed this story:

"Patrolmen A. Williams and Kelcher arrested this morning without a warrant William Greenwood, 50, married, of Water st., Hyde Park, for carrying a revolver at the corner of Dana ave. and Water st. without a license to do so, at time of arrest.

"This arrest was the result of information received from Mrs. Greenwood, who stated that her husband had a revolver and was going to kill her.

"Greenwood stated that he has been receiving aid from the public welfare department more than one year past."

MONEY FOR LIQUOR

And so the police blotters are telling stories these days of persons taking taxpayers' money and forcing welfare totals to mount to millions.

Arrests for drunkenness of men on the welfare payroll are telling a story.

Mayor Curley has said:

"Willing, yes, for those who must have food but not one cent of the city's money for those who must have drink."

Special Officer Fanjoy will go into municipal court again on Monday to ask help of the court in weeding out these frauds.

(More of the series on Monday.)

Speedboat Seized With 500 Sacks Rum

New London, July 19 (AP)—The speed boat Malva was seized today as a rum runner near Jones Inlet, L. I., the Coast Guard announced.

The New York division said 500 sacks of liquor and three men were aboard.

Why not have all the stars send telegrams of congratulation—collect?

GANG HISTORY TRACED FROM TEAPOT STILL

By THE MASKED REPORTER

Copyright, 1932, by the Boston Evening American. All rights reserved.

Building their case against the industrial alcohol barons, Special Agent Joseph A. Tatro and his squad traced the history of the gangs, which, they found, had controlled the operation of 22 large distilling plants in this vicinity.

They learned that the first stills used her were ordinary tea kettles, with a rubber tube attached to the spout, running through a pail of cold water, where the vapor was condensed.

The Masked Reporter

When money began rolling in, and stringent conditions also required better results, the gangs turned their attention to building real stills on a larger scale.

The new stills were generally "kettles" of 100-gallon capacity, with condenser coils. Ordinary fires were used, and there were frequent house or barn fires through careless operation.

BIG BUSINESS ENTERS

Bigger business again brought bigger stills, and today the most efficient distilling plants are highly elaborate affairs.

The investigators found the best plants in this area equipped with 1800 to 2000-gallon mixing tanks, with electrically-driven agitators, filter presses and pumps, such as were discovered in the Woburn "spiking" plant.

When the contents of these huge "kettles" or tanks are heated to vapor points, the vapors rise into copper columns, or shafts, running as high as 30 feet, and five feet in diameter.

The columns are fitted with baffle plates and cuppings every three feet to hold back the vapors of ingredients that have a boiling point lower than alcohol and therefore vaporize quicker.

The alcohol vapor rises to the top of the cooks, where running condensers, with coils filled with cold water, reduce it to liquid alcohol.

Steam is used to heat the big "kettles."

WITHIN THE LAW

Under the law, nobody but a registered still-manufacturer can build a still, but the alcohol racketeers have discovered, found a way to have them made within the law. Stills by the hundreds have been turned out by sheet-metal shops.

Gang leaders, it was found, opened negotiations with the sheet-metal manufacturers, either themselves or through an intermediary, by first ordering a kettle or tank for which plans were produced. There was no law against making that.

Later an order would be put in for the condensing equipment, then for the copper stacks and other articles, while the steam boiler, the piping and steam fittings would be procured separately.

In this way a complete distilling plant was obtained without actual violation of the law on the part of the manufacturer, for the equipment was not a still until assembled.

RACKETEER WELL PAID

To assure efficient operation at all times, the big gangs have always had highly-paid mechanics and technicians on their payrolls. In no section of the country have the alcohol racketeers operated more successfully than here.

Their plants were set up generally in country sections, but occasionally in buildings in the outlying parts of Boston and other Massachusetts cities.

Sometimes they bought the property outright—if sure of protection. Often they purchased through a straw man. Frequently they took leases on option or under other arrangements, putting up straw men or fictitious individuals as the "owners," and making it almost impossible for the government to pin a conviction on those actually owning the still, or on the real owner of the property, or on the straw man or anybody else.

(The inside story of the industrial alcohol racket will be continued in Monday's Boston Evening American—an exclusive feature. Don't miss it).

HEARST BROADCAST TONIGHT

WEEI to Carry His Address at 11:45

By N. F. T.

Early tonight in California (7:45 to 8) finds William Randolph Hearst, noted American journalist, speaking into microphones at station KFI in Los Angeles, for all sections of the nation to hear. Boston and New England listeners will be brought his address (WEEI) between 11:45 p. m. and midnight.

APPEARANCE ARRANGED

On previous occasions, as issues of international importance arise, Mr. Hearst has consented to discuss our economical and political problems from an angle most appreciated by the great masses and captains of industry alike. He is an outstanding character in the estimation of both elements. Few, if any, champions of free thought and speech have the keen, deep welfare of this country at heart as does this patriotic proprietor of the public press. His utterances, therefore, especially in trying times such as these, are strenuously awaited by the heads of the great broadcasting fraternity.

An extensive NBC network of stations from coast to coast will feature the remarks of Mr. Hearst tonight, as always when he speaks.

SWEET SELECTION

Promise of a beautiful bit is held out, saying the A & P Gypsies air offering tonight (WEEI) at 9 o'clock. Frank Parker, popular tenor with Frank Horlick's orchestra, men on that program, including the delightful Romberg selection "Softly as in a Morning Sunrise." Land him an ear or two on the "colyum" recommendation.

That proposed plan to pick up the voice of Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, cruising aboard his yawl in the vicinity of Cape Cod, conceived by boss men at WBZ would have been a noteworthy achievement had it not been held up by Governor Roosevelt himself. As stated, it was real constructive radio promotion, the sort of this kind that is holding local station standards high.

Morton Downey has cut his European holiday short. He leaves on the other side in a day or so to hurry home because of Mrs. Downey (Barbara Bennett) being ill.

Francis P. (Tip) O'Neill just phoned and hopes none of us will believe his "Letting the News While the Public Sleeps" program tonight (WAAB) at 8:30.

GETTING GIFTS

Our old boy friends Amos 'n' Andy still stir earcuppers no little. It seems, no matter what they enter into. This recent "Check" business of interest the subsequent problems having to do with equipment, has resulted in fans forwarding towels, soap, pencils and electric light bulbs and what not. Be not amazed if they do some charitable donating of these various articles shortly. Maybe they would consider the suggestion hereby contributed by your Uncle N. F. T. that they conduct a rummage sale and turn over all proceeds to the nation's needy. Just a thought, with another following immediately. Wonder if anyone had the courage to send along any TOOTHPASTE?

Amelia Earhart Putnam to Christen New Essex

By CARL L. TURNER
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Detroit, July 16 (INS)—The next few weeks will find leading automobile manufacturers bending every effort to throw off a business slump and help maintain the sales average of the year's first five months.

For two years the sales peak was reached in May and then sales gradually declined until the first of the following year. This year the U. S. Department of Commerce production charts did not record a normal passenger car increase the first five months.

A definite upward swing began late in March, however, and it has continued up to the present. Manufacturers are marshaling their organizations to maintain that upward trend.

New models are being introduced and sales organizations are being pepped up. A number of manufacturers have called national dealer conventions for the next few weeks.

The Hudson Motor Car Company's bid for increased business is the new Essex which will compete with lowest priced cars, the field that is attracting most attention from manufacturers now.

It bears but little resemblance to the current models, and will use its rapid acceleration as one bid for public favor. Other details and the new price list were withheld pending formal introduction of the car next week.

Dealers from 40 states will drive 2000 of the new cars from here at the conclusion of a big sales conference, Hudson officials said. Amelia Earhart Putnam foremost woman flier, will christen the first car off the assembly line and it will be presented to Orville Wright, in invention of the first practical airplane.

Willys - Overland and Willys-Knight are waging their campaign on a new series of sixes and eights, reporting a sales volume for June that was 50 per cent greater than their record the preceding month prior to announcement of new models.

Radio Amateurs Plan Supper, Get-Together

The Radio Amateurs Association of Revere, known as "The Hams," are looking forward to a turkey supper and get-together at the Lido Palace Wednesday evening, Aug. 17. Plans for the coming field will be discussed by the "Hams" between the dancing and the entertainment.

The association is made up of amateur wireless operators of Greater Boston, the majority being members of the naval reserve. Many have achieved fame through the work they have done in relaying messages in disasters and other important happenings. Louis J. Ferguson, WIDGM, is president, and Raymond A. Jones, WICQA, vice president.

On the Air

B'dcasters say that if war ever breaks out the govt. will take control of radio and suspend air activities.

It might be war for the govt. but it'd be peace for the listers.

Just think! If radio were shut down how many thousands of crooners, an'cers, orch. leaders and vice-presidents would have to go to work. And a lond speaker would once more merely mean a mother-in-law.

Vincent Lopez has entered the world of Jazz Experimenters, of which Whiteman is the leader. Vince is planning a p'gram of dance music, using seven distinct rhythms without including a fox trot or waltz. Can it be the maniac is coming back? . . . Morton Downey will be back in N. Y. next wk., having cut short his European vacation because of the illness of his wife . . . Ben Bernie's famous but unanswered slogan, "Come Back Prosperity, All Is Forgiven," will soon come at you with the conclusion of a big sales conference, Hudson officials said. Amelia Earhart Putnam foremost woman flier, will christen the first car off the assembly line and it will be presented to Orville Wright, inventor of the first practical airplane.

Willys - Overland and Willys-Knight are waging their campaign on a new series of sixes and eights, reporting a sales volume for June that was 50 per cent greater than their record the preceding month prior to announcement of new models.

With no hope whatsoever of ever bettering the situation through declaring it, the dept. drowns in the complaint that radio never corrects its errors. How relieving for the little Eartha Putnams that are never had but corrected himself after an'ncing "Cheerful Little Earful" for the next day, only to have the orch. render "Religion in Rhythm." And how clarifying it would have been if only a local station explained why it offered up a soprano's screeching after notifying newspapers that baseball scores would be heard at that time. Space forbids listing the 547 other filed complaints of radio's uncorrected errors but some day, some day . . . M. G. M.

Today's News of Live Stocks in Wall Street

TECHNICALLY, the market has become more impressive to those with even slight bullish leanings. There was no objection to the explanation that congressional adjournment provided the principal excuse for the revived speculative operations on the bull side. The fact, however, that the small fry were supporting selling was accepted by some unbiased observers as emphasizing, at least, temporary suspension of sizeable liquidation.

It has been established as fact that odd-lot selling in the early markets this week was of sizeable proportions. At one stage these odd-lot short sales represented more than a third of the total daily odd-lot volume.

Eastman Kodak Shorts Resell

More recent backwardness of Eastman Kodak seems to confirm street reports of fresh speculative selling induced by growing belief that the dividend will be lowered next week. Expectation points to a $3 annual payment contrasted with the $5 rate now in effect. In line with this prospect, reports estimate the current volume of the company's business is down to a level indicating that the need for adjustment of the dividend to more closely correspond to present earning power is becoming an absolute necessity. When the extra payment was omitted earlier in the year, the company's chief executive stated that maintenance of a strong financial condition was the greater desire of the management than the distribution of unearned dividends.

Foreign Buying Favors Rail Shares

Sugar Stock Rise Ignored by Market

Mild boom in the sugar and packing shares, which has lifted prices 200 per cent in some cases from the 1932 lows, is exerting little influence on the general stock market. The reason for this is that sponsors for the two groups have real fundamental basis for marking up operations in the sustained advance in the price of the respective products. Since the move began, representatives issues in both groups have more than doubled in market value. The ease with which the rise has been accomplished has been the envy of the sponsors of other low-priced industrials who have made several unsuccessful attempts to reawaken interest in their favorites this year.

Air Reductions Earnings Estimated

Air Reduction first half net is understood to have been slightly less than the $1.50 dividend requirement.

Lackawanna Not Covering Shares

Revised estimates show Delaware, Lackawanna & Western will fail to earn fixed charges by at least 15 per cent this year and that the deficit will approximate 73 cents a share on the capital stock. This would compare with 1931 earnings of 65 cents a share and of $3.60 a share in 1930. In view of current forecasts recent inclusion of dividend payments, which have been paid almost continuously since 1854, hardly require much explanation.

Gen. Motors and Du Pont Dividends

Despite more optimistic predictions heralding the fact General Motors dividend, talk of a reduction by duPont continues to be heard.

Aviation Industry Growth Exceptional

Compilation of statistics covering the operating end of the aviation industry discloses an exceptional record of consistent growth in spite of depression. Domestic lines operating in the United States carried 170,498 passengers for the year ended May 1, completed with 168,716 for the first six months of 1931. For all of 1931 a total of 522,243 passengers were carried against 417,505 in 1930; 173,405 in 1929, and 49,715 in 1928. In 1929 there were 101 aircraft manufacturing plants in the United States, but at the end of 1931 only 46 were operating. The daily transportation mileage jumped from 90,000 miles in 1930 to 130,000 miles in 1931, and the total mileage covered was 28,834,000 in 1930 and 43,395,000 in 1931.

Report Pool in Steel Common

There were reports of a long-term bull pool in United States Steel common, but the "facts" as rumored themselves seemed to discredit the report. It is more likely that the temporary speculative commitments account for the greater part of the immediate buying in the stock.

Up-to-Date Analysis
(By Standard Statistics Co.)

GOODYEAR TIRE & RUBBER

Profit margins on tires and tubes have been maintained at considerable period and on present curtailed sales volume, this concern cannot show satisfactory earnings. Inventory losses in the first half of 1932 are believed again to have been substantial. Furthermore, Goodyear is unlikely, at least, in the early future, to make any reported price increases designed to offset excise levies, since certain price concessions have failed to follow the increase.

Earnings and dividends—A major decline in tire sales as well as large inventory losses, has severely depressed earnings in the past two years. Profits per preferred share dropped to $6.28 in 1930, from $24.95 in 1929, while in 1931 (after reserves for unrealized losses) a profit of only $1.73 a share was shown. A deficit of $0.37 per common share was reported in 1930, contrasted with the 1929 profit of $10.23. In 1931 the common share loss was $2.83. Since a substantial deficit is anticipated for 1932, suspension of 37 preferred dividends is probable; common distributions were omitted in May.

In addition to tires and tubes, Goodyear is the world's largest fabricator of rubber, producing mechanical rubber goods, hose, heels, soles and related articles, which are distributed through its world-wide dealer organization numbering around 15,000. Goodyear supplies Sears, Roebuck with its entire canvas requirements under long term contract. Goodyear-Zeppelin Corp., a subsidiary, manufactures airships. Cash and equivalent on December 31, last totaled $37,612,000, against total current liabilities of $9,695,000.

That the constructive forces managed to hold the slight advantage they gained at mid-week. If they were receivin, some aid from business, and trade statistics, it would not be at all hard to become real enthusiastic. However, they are not, and hard headed trading policy does not allow one to follow strength.

Silver Shares

The silver shares are under careful accumulation by interests who feel the coming economic conference will produce some agitation for silver as a part of the British money base. Whether any plan is adopted or not, such companies should enjoy a temporary period of popularity.

Certain it is that England regrets that she ever took to placing India on a gold basis. An attempt to rectify this error is favored by many leading economists. Then again, she may wish to buttress the gold standard in some way to prevent a repetition of her experience last fall.

Among the more popular buys are the smelters. Both United States Smelting and American Smelting are generally considered cheap and could do something with a little cheer on the silver outlook. Of the mines Cerro de Pasco and International Silver are well liked.

Ticker Talk

Tape readers consider it a possible that the recent move in United Air is a jiggle . . . As they see it, investors now holding stock may wish to get out and stand one side until they can determine just what effect the new rates will have on air mail tonnage.

Mack Truck statistics throw an interesting light on the type of bargains now available in the share markets . . . If the company paid out the full dividend the amount remaining would still be in excess of the common stock's quoted value at present and equipment are valued at nothing.

Traders viewing the firm grip bulls seem to have on the current market situation would not be surprised if the rally carried to around 90 on the Dow-Jones industrial index . . . They also notice quite a bit of stock is coming out and would not buy in anticipation of the rise.

Odds and Ends

The boardroom gossips have it that Secretary of the Treasury Ogden Mills' recent speech next week which will be susceptible to bullish market interpretation . . . Bears point out that statistics, not talk, will put the market up.

There is some buying of rails on rumors of I. C. C. sanction of the four-party plan of consolidation proposed for Eastern railroads . . . Rail men have little to say on this . . . They point out that the commission is not in the habit of setting a date for its decisions.

Not that it is advisable to be too skeptical, but announcements, even though they clean away the tape hindering the rails, mean little . . . When more freight is carried earnings will come up and the railroad stocks will be a buy, and not before.

PRICE CHANGES AGAIN NARROW IN WALL ST.

New York, July 16—Price changes were again narrow in trading during the short session of the New York Stock Exchange today.

There were feeble efforts to extend yesterday's rally, but they were discontinued when weekend profit-taking appeared. The list closed with a somewhat easy tendency, with a number of declines in the leaders ranging from fractions to a point, while a scattering of issues finished slightly higher.

550,000-SHARE SESSION.

The turnover for the two-hour session was only about 550,000 shares.

Professional traders who had not left town for the week-end evidently were awaiting developments in Washington, where the legislators were working on last-minute items in preparation for an adjournment, after their long session, which started in December.

Among issues losing as much as a point were American Can, Air Reduction, American Telephone and Eastman, while declines of ½ point or so appeared at the close in such shares as U. S. Steel, Woolworth and Allied Chemical.

Rails were given a boost during the morning. Union Pacific got up 1½ points, then lost its gain. A gain of a point in Atchison was reduced to a small fraction.

Utilities generally held up well. Consolidated Gas got up a major fraction at one time, but closed about unchanged.

There was some activity in the oils, but they failed to make notable headway. Shell Union was temporarily higher, but Standard of N. J. finished with a small loss.

CORPORATE BONDS FIRM

Continued firmness of corporate bonds was one of the most encouraging aspects of the week-end markets. The temporary rise in railroad shares was largely in sympathy with further advances in the carrier lines.

Strength of this group has lacked tangible basis, but seemed to be largely in connection with the optimistic forecasts as to the probable accomplishments of the meeting of railway executives in New York next week, at which time avoidance of unnecessary competition is expected to be an important subject.

Foreign trade figures were issued for June and reflected again the paralysis of our export trade. Exports were only $115,000,000, the lowest for any month in years, and $6,000,000 less than imports.

Commodities held up fairly well in quiet, week-end trading. Wheat closed a shade higher, advances in futures ranging from 10 to 25 cents a bale.

Loading of revenue freight for the week ending July 9 was announced today by the American Railway Association as 416,850 cars. Due probably to the Fourth of July holiday, this was a decrease of 72,323 cars below the preceding week this year.

The association in announcing the loadings said comparisons should take into consideration the fact that the 1931 week of July 4 included a holiday.

Cotton futures closed steady, 2-5 higher. July, 5.73; Oct., 5.88-90; Dec., 6.01-02; Jan., 6.10; March, 6.28; May, 6.39-40. Spot, quiet; middling, 5.90.

THE FAITHFUL CHEAT » A Romance of Youth and Millions « By Ruby M. Ayres

Sondra Says Goodbye to Mark and She Sees Sudden Pain Leap Into His Eyes

What Has Gone Before

Why is John Anderson so considerate, Sondra wonders, when she has been an indifferent friend to him? Now he has promised to give Mark Merriman a position in the Congo, although he appears to suspect that she is interested in Mark. Both men love Sondra, and she cannot marry either—Anderson, because he already has a wife from whom he is separated, and Mark, because her father has made her believe she should never marry a poor man. Although she cares for Mark, she is determined not to doom herself to a life of poverty.

Now Read On—

MARK MERRIMAN finished his wine and pushed the glass a little way from him.

"It seems queer," he said haltingly, "that in another 48 hours all this will be left right behind." He laughed, half apologetically. "You see, I've never been out of this country before."

Sondra kept her eyes intent on fighting her cigarette.

"I know," she said vaguely. There was a short silence, then she went on with an effort. "Aren't you frightfully thrilled—about going away, I mean."

Merriman shrugged his shoulders. "I am of course—of course I am—but the United States has always seemed good enough to me—still seems good enough if it comes to that." He frowned and moved restlessly. "Don't think I'm ungrateful."

"Of course not."

"Any other fellow would give his head for my chance, I know—it's wonderful and I owe it all to you, but all the same . . ." He broke off.

"Mr. Anderson says that this is a great opportunity for a man with ambition and energy," she said quietly.

Merriman nodded.

"I know—it was decent of him to choose me. . . . Of course I know it is all your doing."

She half shrugged her white shoulders.

"Oh no, I only just mentioned it, I said you were a friend of mine." "It was kind of you, Sondra."

The silence fell again.

It was very quiet in the little restaurant.

"Seats often go at 11, don't they?" she hazarded.

"Do they? I don't know."

Merriman lit another cigarette. The little tiny breeze there was on the table was already full of half smoked cigarettes which he had lit and allowed to go out.

"I wonder how long it will be before I am home again," he said abruptly. "Anderson said five years, he thought."

He carefully avoided her eyes.

"Five years is not such a very long time," Sondra said.

"Isn't it? It's long enough. All sorts of things will have happened. I expect I shall feel a stranger in a strange land."

SO MUCH TO TELL

"You'll have so much to tell us all. The wonderful things you will have seen. I believe the voyage is marvellous.

It was clever of her to speak so quietly she thought; she was sure that nobody would have guessed from her even voice, the torment she was suffering as she sat there, smiling and outwardly indifferent, talking so platitudinously.

"Haven't you? I've been as far as Madeira. We had a wonderful time on board."

"We must stops at Madeira."

"Does it?"

She knew perfectly well where it stopped, how long it took, the date it arrived—everything about it. Already she had mentally gone through the agony of farewell and had nerved herself how she would be able to bear those last moments.

HER OWN DOING

And it was her own doing—she had brought this about; but for her, Mark might still have stayed in America where sometimes she could have seen him.

But what would have been the use? She would never have married him: could never have had the courage to face poverty which life would mean as his wife. Cheap clothes, a mean house, the eternal grind of trying to make ends meet on nothing a year: growing discontent and disillusionment till love finally died, and they would be left face to face together, perhaps hating one another and only longing to be free.

He raised her eyes slowly and looked at him.

He was a little pale, though his lips smiled determinedly as their glances met.

"If I make a success of it, I shall owe it all to you," he said, and she answered with quiet conviction:

"You will make a success of it, Mark."

He moved his hand towards her a little as it rested on the table, then drew it quickly away again.

"I suppose we ought to be going."

SONDRA SHIVERED

Sondra shivered a little.

"Is it very late?"

"Half past 12."

"Oh." She ground out the end of he cigarett, and gathered up her gloves and handbag.

"I suppose this is goodbye," she said with a faint smile. She saw the sudden pain that leapt to his eyes.

"But I shall see you again?"

"Oh, I hope." There was a sharp note in her voice now, as if something within her was suffering, on edge. "But course, I shall come and wave to you and wish you good speed."

She broke off, and for a moment they were both silent, looking at one another. Then Sondra rose.

"Let us go."

He followed her silently out of the little restaurant into the quiet side street.

His car was standing at the curb —the inevitable chauffeur at attention which Sondra knew was already sold. This was the last time she would ever ride in it—the last time she would ever be with him.

(Copyright, 1932, by Ruby M. Ayres)

Some Dishes of Hearty Variety

By MARTHA LEE

A CERTAIN fortunate proportion of our population is spending the summer at the beach, where, no matter what heights the thermometer may ascend in the city, cool breezes whet the appetite and inspire mother to produce meals of the heartier variety.

Sundays at the bench usually mean a gathering of the in-laws, supplemented by seven usual acquaintances. This would be all very well if the home kitchen and gas range could be moved right down to the shore, but usually it means struggling with a blue flame oil burner or, worse yet, a small electric plate. This being the case, I think the beach dweller will appreciate the following menu of easy-to-prepare and easy-to-eat dishes:

Creole Steak
Mashed Potatoes
Bread and Butter
Jellied Grapefruit Salad
Peach Shortcake

CREOLE STEAK

Salt and pepper two pounds round steak and dredge well with flour. Brown both sides in a little fat in a heavy skillet. Remove meat, add one shredded green pepper and one small onion minced and brown. Return meat to pan, spread with prepared mustard and put the pepper and onions on top and around the steak. Add one 10-ounce can tomato soup, thickly and cook slowly until very tender. Just before done add one 11-ounce can peas. Serves six.

JELLIED GRAPEFRUIT SALAD

Dissolve one package orange gelatin in one cup boiling water, add 2 thsps. sugar and juice from one No. 2 can grapefruit and let cool. When beginning to thicken, add the shredded grapefruit and pour into moulds. Chill, unmold onto lettuce and top with one-half cup mayonnaise. Serves six.

PEACH SHORTCAKE

Cake layers, which may be purchased at the grocery, a medium-sized can of any fruit desired, peaches, pineapple, apricots and whipped cream, may be put together quickly for a delicious shortcake.

Tomorrow's Menu

BREAKFAST
Fruit
Puffy Omelet with Tomato Sauce
Toast Coffee

DINNER
Cream of Tomato Soup
Roast Beef
String Beans
Baked Stuffed Potatoes
Lettuce with Russian Dressing
Coffee Custard
Iced Coffee

SUPPER
Egg and Sardine Salad
Bread and Butter Sandwiches
Sliced Pineapple

Proper Form of Engraving

By MRS. BEECKMAN

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

Will you kindly tell me what to engrave on a gentleman's watch?

J.

The best form is to have the initials, in plain block letters, engraved on the back, if it is an open face watch or on the front, if it closes. The letters should be very forthright, very masculine. You may use the initials without the periods; or use the periods in the conventional places; or have them engraved in the center of the space between the letters.

Wedding Dinner

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

1. My cousin is to be married next week and they are having dinner served at her home. We received an invitation to the church and to dinner. My aunt asked my young sister to help serve dinner. I think that was wrong. I think that it is an insult. Mother thinks that it is all right. Please tell me who is right.

2. If we go to church, would it be all right if we didn't go to dinner in the evening, as we have another engagement for the same evening?

READER.

1. I agree with your mother about your sister. The invitation probably was given. I am sure that your aunt probably thought it would be charming to have the party surrounded by devoted relatives who would enjoy giving the service and who would do it graciously and devotedly.

2. Another engagement is usually sufficient reason for not attending a party of any kind, but it does seem rather inconsiderate not to go to the dinner after the wedding of a cousin.

Baby Announcement

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

I am expecting a baby soon. My husband was killed recently. I would like to know how to send out my announcements and to whom, whether it would be "Mr. and Mrs." or just "Mrs."?

H.

My dear, they aren't. I am so sorry. May I have the privilege of sending you through my column this message of very deep sympathy? How brave you must be to face this . . . bless you for it. Perhaps you'd rather not send out any announcements . . . they aren't necessary, you know . . . but if you do, they should be sent out in only your name.

Marry-Go-Round

Love Without the Headache

By HUEN ROWLAND

HOPE SPRINGS eternal lives in feminine breast as long as a woman has enough enthusiasm to have another "permanent" and buy an indelible lipstick.

Summer has been called the season of romance; but mono-

The styles change in everything —clothes, manners, furniture and diseases. But, in nothing have they changed so radically as in the art of dressing, which has become so modernistic that you'd scarcely recognize it as the same old emotion.

* * *

First, woman sets up social standards and moral convictions for man to live up to—and then she sues him for alimony when he tries to dodge them.

* * *

The latest popular method of spiting your last husband appears to be to go back and marry your first one.

* * *

It always astonishes a man to discover that a girl has an old-fashioned, red-flannel conscience underneath a flatly, pink georgette personality. And that underneath her sawy beach-pajama manner there is a lot of solid, cotton hose common sense.

* * *

Love is not actually over until a man stops making daily excuses for calling you up and begins making bi-weekly apologies for NOT calling you up.

* * *

Long after she has forgotten the kisses of a man's lips, a woman can recall the caress in his eyes—and sigh.

* * *

A "quitter," according to Reno Ruth, is a woman who stops getting married after the first two bad breaks, and just concludes that all men are a headache and not worth the aspirin.

Hints From the Beauty Box

GILDING the eyelashes has become a pastime with some of the gals who would dance away the beauty pageant. Bright blue lashes are another notion, but that is explained by the popularity of blue eye shadows. Mirth as well make a full-sized job of it and include the winkers. Well, the little dollies must have something to chatter about!

LACQUERED hair is seen now and then where lovely ladies gather. The effect is severe, but foxy exotic creatures—long and tall and slender—seem no to mind. Certainly long locks are only for the youthful countenance. They are not flattering, far from it. But trea chic.

IF IT IS NECESSARY for the heart's contentment to have hair of shoulder length, there nu- be the utmost care exercised in arranging rear locks. They can be crossed, ribbon fashion, and held flat with pins. This style snuggles in closer to the nape of the neck than the unminded little bun from which ends like to break away and see what's doing.

Latest in Fashions

A NICE FRIENDSHIP in the sartorial world is that of the two colors, brown and pink. A charming frock in pink chalky crepe has a large brown chiffon bow that is laced through the base of the V neckline. There is a tiny jacket with brief cape sleeves.

OF COURSE you wear straw hats in summer but why not include a smart faoric hat in your millinery wardrobe? You will find it most useful. A new model has a crown of white and blue plaided chiffon and a navy taffeta brim. The crown is banded with a twist made of both fabrics.

A CHARMING picture is a little girl in organdie. A delightful dress for a six-year-old is of blue and white organdie. The fitted bodice of white organdie has a turn-over collar and two narrow rolls of the blue organdie. The very full skirt is made of alternating blue and white narrow ruffles. The frock is sleeveless.

Listen, World! Vision

By ELSIE ROBINSON.

SO MANY YEARS hitting these little keys, my eyes are growing very tired. Yesterday the doctor told me that I must wear glasses all the time now.

I have never minded glasses, as some women do; but to wear them all the time?

Outside the office window the world was a shimmer and a splatter of gold and green and turquoise. The tall buildings were white cubes of light, piled on each other, set with violet tiles of shadow. Faint filaments of silver cobwebs drifted, glistening, through the sun-drenched air. Minute glints of radiance, small as flake gold—

Elsie Robinson

How I have loved it—this exquisite world! Always it has been the one thing that never failed to comfort me—to fill my eyes with it; to fill my heart with it through my eyes.

And now to know that I shall not see it any more with open, happy eyes; shall have to see it always through a film—a film that must slowly but surely grow darker!

Just for a moment I did not think that I could bear it. I did not want to be shut behind glass. I did not want to see things dim and twisted.

And then a strange thing happened. Almost as if a quiet, strange voice spoke to me, I heard these words:

"But you have always seen things dim and twisted, child.

"Never have you seen the world as it really is. Never have you seen people as they really are.

"You have always been blinded by your own ignorance and conceit; your own fear and resentment.

"All these years your eyes have stared, unfettered, at beauty and wonder and mystery and noble adventure. How much of it have you ever really seen?

"In every pair of eyes you pass the miracle of their beauty. Love bared to your vision; but how often have you observed that miracle?

"You think you have seen your world; but you have never seen your world. You have only seen that which you wished to see; that which you old enough to see. All the rest you have missed."

Quietly in my hea the gentle voice spoke on, and suddenly I was remembering other words—

The words of a proud and passionate old man who, also, had wanted to see and do everything without hindrance. And though men later on were to call him Saint Paul, there was little of saintliness in his young stubbornness and conceit, for in those first days nobody could tell him anything. He, too, felt he saw all things clearly.

But the years passed—

And sorrow came—

And his conceit dropped from him—

And at last he saw with his soul what he had not been able to see with his arrogant eyes. He saw that he had always been blind. And he wrote:

"FOR NOW WE SEE THROUGH A GLASS, DARKLY, BUT THEN FACE TO FACE. NOW I KNOW IN PART: BUT THEN SHALL I KNOW EVEN AS I AM KNOWN."

Now we see "thro:gh a glass, darkly," whether we "wear glasses" or not!

Now we see all things, understand all things, through the darkness of our own limitations—and nothing but love and wisdom can clear our shadowed eyes.

But some day, when we have grown up and are no longer foolish, bewildered children, we shall truly see. Then we will no longer fear or hate or distort the truth, but we will see the purpose than runs beneath all blundering, the beauty that abides behind all ugliness.

And so—I don't mind wearing glasses today. I'm not worrying about the spectacles on my nose.

I'M ONLY WORRIED ABOUT THE BLINDERS ON MY SOUL.

Daily True Story

"Use Your Eyes"

IT WASN'T until after the wedding that Grandfather told how it was he had been so certain that Anne would marry Carter Harris instead of Phil Barrett.

"Never you mind, now," he would say when other members of the family asked why he was so sure. "You just take my word for it that when she makes her choice it will be that Harris boy. And a good boy he is, too."

"But what makes you so certain?" Anne's mother would ask. "They're both good boys, as far as that goes. And Anne doesn't seem to show any preference. I'm sure she's not engaged to Carter or she would have told me so."

"Maybe she isn't," replied Grandfather. "But she will be. You just wait and see."

It was summertime and the members of the family, except Joe, were sitting on the front porch that night when Anne and Carter Harris returned from a musical which had ended early. They drove up in a taxicab and got out. A moment later Anne turned and called to her father:

"Dad, have you got any change of ten dollars? The driver hasn't any change."

Another father got up and went down to the curb. He returned with Anne and Carter. The latter made no attempt to withdraw Anne from other members of her family. A short time later he left for his own home. Anne went into the house. Mr. Leonard, her father, spoke.

"That certainly doesn't look to me like they were going to get married," he said, "When I was courting a girl I certainly didn't sit around and talk to her family."

JUST PRETENDING

"Notice anything when you went down to give Anne that change?" he asked.

"No, why?" asked Mr. Leonard.

"Nothing," replied grandfather. "But it's just like I was telling you. If you'd use your eyes you'd know as much as I do and you'd know who she is going to marry. I've been sitting here on the porch a couple of times when she came home in a cab with Carter and I had to make change for him. But I used my eyes. That's why I know."

"Oh, you're just pretending," interrupted Mrs. Leonard. "You really don't know any more than we do—you're just guessing. But at that I think you're right. About her marrying Carter, I mean. Have you noticed that she's been seeing a lot more of him recently. It seems to me she's with him nearly every night. Phil Barrett doesn't come nearly as often as he used to."

Grandfather merely chuckled as a reply.

Six weeks later Anne announced her engagement.

"Didn't I tell you?" said Grandfather when he heard it. "And just because you didn't believe me I'm not going to tell you how I knew it until after the marriage. Then you can ask Anne and she'll tell you I was right."

HAD TO WAIT

The other members of the family had to be content with that and wait until after the marriage. And when Anne returned from her honeymoon she admitted that Grandfather had been right.

"It was like this," Grandfather finally explained. "I told you that two or three times I had to make change for Carter when he brought Anne home in a taxicab. But I always took a little squint and noticed how much the meter registered. It was five or six dollars—around there. If they had come straight home it would would have been 70 or 80 cents. And that meant that they had been riding through the park hugging each other. I knew Anne and she wouldn't do that with a man unless she intended to marry him."

Model That Slenderizes

PATTERN 9202

Illustrated Step-by-Step Making Instructions Included With This Pattern

UNBROKEN LINES tend to add height and make the silhouette appear slimmer. Therefore this model is particularly appropriate for the larger figure. Cape sleeves, lace vestee, and scalloped seaming of the bodice and skirt are very dainty, feminine touches. The frock is moulded slightly at the waistline by horizontal tucks. We just can't tell you in words how lovely it is on the figure.

Pattern 9202 may be ordered only in sizes 36 to 48. Size 36 requires 3¼ yards of 39-inch fabric and ½ yard of 18-inch lace.

To get a pattern of this model, send fifteen cents (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred). Please write very plainly your name, address, style number and size of each pattern ordered.

Send for your copy of Marian Martin's Pattern Catalog. This features 22 pages of the most delightful current models, carefully selected for the woman who sews at home. 'Home Would Be Heaven if Only--'

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a very ambitious young wife, 30 years old, and have two fine children, a boy and a girl. Our home would be a Heaven if I wasn't for my husband's heavy drinking. If I beg him to quit drinking, because it ruins his health and is also a very bad example for his children, he tells me that if I don't like the way he lives I should get someone I like better. Please advise me what to do. I don't want to divorce him. Guess I'm one of those old fashioned women; I'd like to keep the family together. We also own a home and business, which I am taking care of most of the time.

GOOD HOUSEWIFE.

Dear Housewife: These lean years, so many men drink anything to forget their financial troubles, even for a moment. But owning your own home and business does away with that conjecture in the case of your husband. Try to find out why he drinks. Has he an "inferiority complex?" Has he some business worries you don't know about? It's hard not to criticize and say anything as repulsive as a man who has drank too much, but patience is wiser. Sometimes the craving for liquor is lessened by certain foods. You might consult your doctor about this. I am heartily with you in trying to keep the home together, and I sincerely hope conditions may improve.

Money and Love

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

My friend is ready to marry me anytime, but insists that I turn over to him my savings, now drawing 2 per cent interest in the savings bank. He says he trusts me, only a man should be the responsible head of the house, have a job, but I just can't decide to ask him for my own money. He makes a lot of fuss over my boy of five. Mother doesn't care for this man, but he is so fascinating I am ready to believe anything. Then afterwards, I take a second thought.

EMMA.

Dear Emma: There is no trouble about hitting the nail on the head in this case, and I am glad you have written me. You find this man fascinating. He is more than fascinating. On your statement of the case, he is mercenary—and that is a mild statement.

More than your money is at stake—your happiness, and that of your child or five. Are you justified in taking a chance involving that little person? And what about your mother. Such a selfish person undoubtedly would require you to get rid of her. Your trustfulness makes me think you must have lived a very sheltered life. Your life as it is may be dull, but it is not a mistake about marriage you may look back with passionate regret upon these peaceful days, forgetting altogether that you once thought them dull. I find that so many people fail to read the news and profit by it. Haven't you seen the account of the trial of a man, middle-aged, and from all accounts unattractive? He was one of those "loving souls," but he took the money of trusting women in advance of marriage. This man was tried for the murder of one of the many he was suspected of killing. He was found guilty of murder and hanged, while stoutly protesting his innocence. You have no excuse for taking chances.

Croup Attacks the Delicate Children

By DR. R. S. COPELAND

SOME DELICATE children have sensitive nervous systems, with a tendency to catarrhal conditions, and they are the ones who are liable to contract croup.

Dr. Copeland

The disease is seldom found in babies younger than six months, and the most common between the ages of six months and three years. False croup, as the doctor calls it, is a spasm of the muscles in the upper part of the windpipe, and is accompanied by difficult breathing.

When a child apparently in good health develops a hoarse barking cough this is always regarded by parents as a "croupy" cough. The child should be kept in a room of even temperature because the cough usually grows worse as the coolness of night approaches. The child may go to sleep as usual, but some time during the night wakens with a cry of distress, and clutch its throat in an effort to get its breath. Breathing is done with a loud whistling sound, and the child's face is contested and has a look of extreme distress.

Every mother should know what to do until the doctor comes. Hot applications applied to the throat and chest, and steam inhalations often give relief. A drink of hot milk, if the child can be induced to swallow, is excellent.

Between attacks a nourishing diet should be given, building up the general health. If the child is of an irritable, nervous temperament, he should lead as quiet a life as possible. A physician should always be consulted in regard to the condition of the throat, as the tonsils and adenoids may require attention.

Answers to Health Queries

J. J. B. Q.—What do you advise for dry hair?

A.—Brush the hair daily and use a good tonic. Send self-addressed stamped envelope for full particulars and repeat your question.

Q.—What is the cause of a pain I have just to the left side of my stomach? It seems to be worse when I laugh or when I breathe quite deep.

A.—This trouble is probably from indigestion. You should eat the simplest kind of food, avoiding tea and coffee. In place of white bread eat bran muffins, toast or zwieback. Each day take systematic outdoor exercise and sleep in a well-ventilated room.

A Very Interested Reader. Q. —I have heard that a solution of five parts of peroxide to two parts of ammonia will bleach and tend to discourage the growth of hair on the face. Is this a fact and is the solution harmful in any way to the skin.

A.—Fresh peroxide of hyrogren frequently applied will bleach the hair, making it less conspicuous and, it is contanded by some, peroxide will retard the hair growth.

Gossip About People You Know

WILT AFTER MOTH PEST

Charles L. Bailey, secretary of the state commission on conservation, believes a wilt disease will follow the invasion of gypsy moths on Cape Cod. Tremendous damage has been done by the pests this season, thousands of fine trees having been completely striped of their foliage in that area, as a result of riggardly economy programs by some of the towns. Mr. Bailey says that if the wilt disease follows there will be a big change for the better next year.

WARD-BRODY MAY RUN

Atty. Paul Ward-Brody, advertising manager of a Boston newspaper, who has taken an active part in various political campaigns, is said to be seriously considering running for the Republican nomination for state auditor. He has never held public office.

SIGN PAINTERS PROBE

City Council now has it that officials of the sign painters' union are investigating charges that union labels appearing on signs urging the election of a certain candidate for political office are forgeries and that the signs are not the product of union men. The signs, it is said, have been placed in prominent locations throughout the city. If the story is true the court action which is sure to follow should arouse interest in the pre-primary campaign.
